PREFACE

For the honour of being invited to prepare an authentic edition of Kālidāsa's Megha-dūta, it is my pleasant duty to thank the members of the Sanskrit Advisory Board of the Sahitya Akademi and its distinguished Vice-Chairman, Dr S Radhakrishnan. As far as possible, within certain limits of time, all available materials have been utilized and it is hoped that nothing important has been overlooked. The extent of materials, as well as the method of editing, has been indicated in the Introduction and even at the risk of a little lengthiness the critical footnotes to the text are meant to give a general view of the text-tradition. What the new features of this edition are the reader can easily find out, if he cares, but I should like to think that the one thing he cares for is the poem itself, and not the comparative merits of different editions. Let me hope that this edition will not only stimulate further research into the text-problem, but also help further study and enjoyment of this masterpiece of the great poet, which should be its ultimate object.

Among those friends who readily assisted me by loan of rare books and manuscripts, I return my sincere thanks to Dr S K Belvalkar, Dr V Raghavan, Dr P K Gode, Dr V G Paranjpe, and Dr J B Chaudhuri. I also thank Sri Krishna Kripalani, Secretary, Sahitya Akademi, for uniform courtesy in rendering whatever assistance I required. To my former pupil, Mrs Sibani Dasgupta MA, DPhil, I am indebted for help in many ways in preparing this edition and its press-copy. Sincere thanks are also due to my former pupil and present colleague, Dr R C Hazra, for his kindness in looking over the final proofs.

In spite of all care in proof-reading, it is to be regretted that some misprints still linger, especially in the footnotes and indices. Most of these are due to the breaking down of icpha, anusvāra and visarga, or of the vowel-signs for i, e and o. As these can be easily made out, they are not listed here, but there are a few serious misprints, which are listed below and which the reader may kindly correct.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

GREAT classics of literature spring from profound depths in human experience. They come to us who live centuries later in vastly different conditions as the voice of our own experience. They release echoes within ourselves of what we never suspected was there. The deeper one goes into one's own experience facing destiny, fighting fate, or enjoying love, the more does one's experience have in common with the experiences of others in other climes and ages. The most unique is the most universal. The Dialogues of the Buddha or of Plato, the dramas of Sophocles, the plays of Shakespeare are both national and universal. The more profoundly they are rooted in historical traditions, the more uniquely do they know themselves and elicit powerful responses from others. There is a timeless and spaceless quality about great classics.

Kālidāsa is the great representative of India's spirit, grace and genius. The Indian national consciousness is the base from which his works grow. Kālidāsa has absorbed India's cultural heritage, made it his own, enriched it, given it universal scope and significance. Its spiritual direction, its intellectual amplitude, its artistic expressions, its political forms and economic arrangements, all find utterance in fresh, vital, shining phrases. We find in his works at their best a simple dignity of language, a precision of phrase, a classical taste, a cultivated judgment, an intense poetic sensibility and a fusion of thought and feeling. In his dramas, we find pathos, power, beauty, and great skill in the construction of plots and delineation of characters. He is at home in royal courts and on mountain tops, in happy homes and forest hermitages. He has a balanced outlook which enables him to deal sympathetically with men of high and low degree—fishermen, courtezans servants. These great qualities make his works belong to the literature of the world. Humanity recognises itself in them though they deal with Indian themes. In India Kālidāsa is recognised as the greatest poet and dramatist in Sanskrit literature. While once the poets were being counted, Kālidāsa as being the first occupied the last finger. But the ring-finger remained true to its name, arāmikā, nameless, since the second to Kālidāsa has not yet been found¹.

Date

Tradition associates Kālidāsa with king Vikramāditya of Ujjayini who founded the Vikrama era of 57 B.C.² The change in the name of the hero of Vikramorvaśīya from Purūravas to Vikrama lends support to the view that Kālidāsa belonged to the court of King Vikramāditya of Ujjayini. Agnimitra who is the hero of the drama Mālavikāgnimitra was not a well-known monarch to deserve special notice by Kālidāsa. He belonged to the second century before Christ and his capital was Vidisā. Kālidāsa's selection of this episode and his reference to Vidisā as the famous capital of a king in Megha-dūta suggest that Kālidāsa was a contemporary of Agnimitra. It is clear that Kālidāsa flourished after Agnimitra (c. 150 B.C.).

2 The Jain Kālakācārya Kathānaka records that the Sakas invaded Ujjayini and overthrew the dynasty of Gaidhabhilla, who was styled Mahendraditya. Some years afterwards, his son, Vikramāditya, repelled the invaders and re-established the old dynasty. It is sometimes said that the play, Vikramorvaśīya celebrates this re-conquest. Urvāśī is the city of Ujjayini ruled by Mahendraditya. She was conquered by Keśin, a demon, i.e. the chief of the bearded Sakas. The city became desolate and like Urvāśī was transformed into a creeper. Prince Vikramāditya regained the capital with a valour capable of obliating even his father Mahendra.

Mahendra conferred the throne on the prince and himself retired to the forest. To commemorate the great victory, Vikrama founded an era which was later called by his name.

and before A D 634, the date of the famous Aihole inscription which refers to Kālidāsa as a great poet. If the suggestion that some verses of Mandasor inscription of A D 473 assume knowledge of Kālidāsa's writings is accepted, then his date cannot be later than the end of the fourth century A D. There are similarities between Aśvaghoṣa's Buddhacarita and Kālidāsa's works. If Aśvaghoṣa is the debtor, then Kālidāsa was of an earlier date than the first century A D. If Kālidāsa is the debtor then his date would be later than the first century A D.

It is suggested that Kālidāsa belongs to the Gupta period and lived in the reign of Chandragupta II, who had the title of Vikramāditya. He came to power about A D 345 and ruled

- 4 Professor A. Berriedale Keith writes

"Kālidāsa was later than Aśvaghoṣa and than the dramatist Bhāsa, he knew Greek terms as his of Jāmitra proves; the prakrit of his dramas is decidedly later than Aśvaghoṣa's and Bhāsa's and he cannot be put before the Gupta age. We must remember that Chandragupta II had the style of Vikramāditya with whose name tradition consistently connects Kālidāsa. Nor is it absurd to see in the title Kumāresambhava a hint at the young Kumāragupta or even in Vikramorviśīya an allusion to the title Vikramāditya"—A History of Sanskrit Literature (1920), p. 80

Sir William Jones places Kālidāsa in the first century B C. Dr Peterson says "Kālidāsa stands in the beginning of the Christian era, if indeed, he does not overtop it."

R. T. H. Griffith remarks "About the time when Horace and Virgil were shedding an undying lustre upon the reign of Augustus, our poet Kālidāsa lived, loved and sang, giving and taking honour, at the polished court of the no less munificent patrons of Sanskrit literature, at the period of its highest perfection"—Preface to The Birth of the War-God (1918).

till about 411. Whichever date we adopt we are in the region of reasonable conjecture and nothing more.

Works

Kālidāsa speaks very little of himself and we cannot therefore be sure of his authorship of many works attributed to him. There is, however, general agreement about Kāli Dāsa's authorship of the following works:

1 Abhijñāna-Sākuntala, a drama in ten acts dealing with the love and marriage of Duśyanta and Sākuntalā, (Abbr. S)

2 Vikramorvasīya, a drama in five acts dealing with the love and marriage of Purūravas and Ūrvaśī, (Abbr. V)

3 Mālavikāgnimitra, a drama in five acts dealing with the love of Mālavikā and Aśvameṣa, (Abbr. M)

4 Raghuvamśa, an epic poem of nineteen cantos describing the lives of the Kings of the solar race (Abbr. R)

5 Kumārasambhava, also an epic poem of seventeen cantos, dealing with the marriage of Śiva and Pārvatī and the birth of Kumāra, the lord of war, (Abbr. K)

6 Meghadūta, a poem of 129 stanzas describing the message of a Yakṣa to his wife, to be conveyed through a cloud,

7 Ritu-saṃhāra, a descriptive account of the six seasons. Kālidāsa takes up his themes from the traditional lore of the country and transforms them to achieve his object. For example, in the epic story Sākuntalā was a calculating, worldly young woman and Duśyanta a selfish lover. The poet wishes to exhibit the sentiment of love from its first awakening in a hemlock grove to its fullest perfection through the stages of separation, frustration, etc. In his own words, a play must present the diversity of life, and communicate charm and sweetness to men of varied tastes.

traigunyodbhavam atra lokacāritam nānā-rasam dīśyate nāṭyam bhīma-rucer ionasya bahudhāpy ekam saṃśrādhanam

Some of his themes seem to be unrealistic such as the carrying of a message by a cloud⁵ The poet anticipates the objection and answers it

*dhūma jyotiḥ salila marutām sammipātaḥ kva meghah sandeśārthāḥ kva patukaranaiḥ prāmbhīḥ prāpanīyān ?
ity autsukyād apānganayan guhyakas tam yayāce kāṁartā hi prakṛti-krpāṇāḥ cetanācetanasu*

"Where is a cloud, which is a composite of smoke, light, water and air, and where are the messages that can be conveyed by living beings endowed with strong limbs? Without considering this, the Yakṣa in his eagerness begged the cloud to carry his message Those that are love-stricken are by nature indiscriminating between conscious and unconscious beings"⁶ Rāma's longing for his lost wife may have suggested to Kālidāsa Yakṣa's sorrow for the wife from whom he is separated

Life

We do not know any details about Kālidāsa's life Numerous legends have gathered round his name which have no historical value From his writings it is clear that he lived in an age of polished elegance and leisure was greatly attached to the arts of song and dance drawing and painting, was acquainted with the sciences of the day, versed in law and learned in the philosophical systems and ritual practices He travelled widely in India and seems to have been familiar with the geography of the country from the Himālayas to Kānyākumārī His graphic descriptions of the Himālayan scenes, of the saffron-flower the plant of which grows in Kashmir, look like those of one who has personal acquaintance with them He was sensitive to beauty in nature and human life

5 The cloud as a messenger is an old, pre-Christian, literary motif in China We find it in Kiu yuan (or Chu yuan), the Chinese poet who died about 274 B.C. Cf. this echo of Mebhādūta in Hsukan

O floating clouds that swim in the heaven above

Bear on your wings these words to him I love

—H. A. Giles A History of Chinese Literature p. 119

Kālidāsa had self-confidence. In one place he says "If you have hearts which can melt in pity, do not set aside this canto of mine"

idā esa saṅgaḥ karuṇādhacittan na me bhavadbhīḥ pretisakunīyah⁷

This sense of assurance is not inconsistent with humility. He opens his Raghuvamśa with a confession of his rashness in undertaking the work

keśa sīva-prabhero vṃśaḥ kva cālpaṃsayā matih mṃsur dustaram mōhād udupenāsmi sāgaram⁸

"Where is the race originating from the Sun and where is my talent limited in scope? Through infatuation, I am desirous of crossing with a raft the ocean that is difficult to cross"

mandah kavī yaśaḥ prārthī gamiśyāmy upahāsyatām prāmśulabhye phale lobhād udbahuḥ iva vāmanah⁹

"Foolish and yet longing for a poet's renown, I shall become an object of ridicule, like a dwarf with his hands raised through greed towards a fruit accessible (only) to the tall." If he still prefers to speak of the kings of the Raghu race, it is because he can count on ancient poets who have already opened the way and their virtues are so compelling in their character¹⁰

Vāmana in his Kāvyaśloṃkāra defines vīti as viśistā padavacanā, a particular style of expression and Vaidarbhī vīti of which Kālidāsa is the master, as consisting of the following features :

*ślesah prasādah samatā mōdhuryam sukumārātē
artha-vyaktiḥ udāratvam ojaḥ kōṇti samādhayah*

Suggestiveness, serenity, balance, sweetness, delicacy, clarity of sense, breadth of expression, vigour of thought, brilliance of diction and harmony of sentiments

The master artist suggests by a few touches what others fail to do even by elaborate discourses. Kālidāsa is famous for his economy of words and naturalness of speech in which sound and sense match His pen pictures are graceful and perfect, the royal chariot in full speed,¹¹ the running deer,¹² Urvashi's bursting into tears,¹³ Nārada's appearance in the sky like a moving kalpa-vrksa ¹⁴ He is master in the use of simile

*sarasijam anuviddham savalenāpi ranayam

"Even as the single stain of the moon is not noticed by one who gazes at the beams that flow endlessly even so no one dares to blame a shade of weakness in a hero's fame" Practically on every page we have illustrations of Kālidāsa's mastery over the use of figures of speech

Kālidāsa's writings instruct not by direct teaching but by gentle persuasion as by a loving wife Mammata says · kāntā-sammitatayopadeśayuje rūmāṁśor varitavyam, na rāvanād vat By an aesthetic presentation of great ideas, the artist leads us to an acceptance of the same We live vicariously the life of every character that is set before us, and out of it all comes a large measure of understanding of mankind in general Kālidāsa projects his rich and glowing personality on a great cultural tradition and gives utterance to its ideals of salvation, order, love He expresses the desires, the urges, the hopes, the dreams, the successes and the failures of man in his struggle to make himself at home in the world India has stood for a whole, integrated life and resisted any fragmentation of it

The poet describes the psychological conflicts that divide the soul and helps us to pull the whole pattern together.

Kālidāsa's works preserve for us moments of beauty, incidents of courage, acts of sacrifice and deepest mood of the human heart. His works will continue to be read for that indefinable illumination about the human predicament which is the work of a great poet. Many of his lines have become almost like proverbs in Sanskrit.

Let us see

Kumārasambhava opens with a verse where the poet speaks as if the Himālayas were the measuring rod spanning the wide land from the east to the western sea :

*asty uttarasyām dīś devatātmanā
himālayo nūna naṣṭhūjāh pūrvāpṛacī tovaandhī ragāhya sthitaḥ pṛthivyā eva mānadandah*

He suggests that the culture developed in the Himālayas regions may be the 'measuring rod' of the cultures of the world.¹⁶ This culture is essentially spiritual in quality. We are ordinarily imprisoned in the wheel of time, in history, and so are restricted to the narrow limits of existence. Our aim should be to lift ourselves out of our entanglement to an awareness of the real which is behind and beyond all time and history, that which does not become, that which is, absolute, non-historical being itself. We cannot think it, enclose it within categories, images and verbal structures. We know more than we can think and express in historical forms. The end of man is to become aware by experience of this absolute reality. Compare the words of Raghuvamśa brahmabhūṣyām gatim āpugāma. The mind of enlightenment reaches the supreme timeless life. The performer of good deed, has heaven for his share. We know the real by the deepest part of our being, ātmanam ātmana vidmaḥ.

16 Cf. Manu

*etad-deśa-parasūlasya śekṣād agra-jñānānāh
svam svam caritram śikṣeran pṛthivyām sarva manavāh*

17 K. II 10, see Bhagavadgītā X 15

The Real is the knower and the known. vedyam ca veditā cāsi ¹⁸
 Again yam aksaram vedavido vidus tam āmānam ātmany avalokayantam ¹⁹ The Supreme leads a life of contemplation Though he grants the fruits of others' austerities, he himself performs austerities svayam vidhōi tāpasah phalānam kenāpi kūmena tapaś cacāra ²⁰

The Absolute which is the Real beyond all darkness is superior to the division of spirit and matter. It is omniscient, omnipresent and almighty. It manifests itself in the three forms (tri-mūrti), Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva, the maker, the preserver and the destroyer. These gods are of equal rank and a believer may select any form which appeals to him for worship. In daily life, Kālidāsa was a follower of the Śaiva system. The opening invocations of the three dramas show that Kālidāsa was a devotee of Śiva.

The three methods of jñāna, yoga and bhakti are mentioned, and the last is said to be the easiest path

While in Mālavikāgnimitra, the Lord should set us on the right path, sanmāṅga, in Vikramorvaśīya, he is said to be easily attainable by devotion, bhakti-yoga-sulabha, in Sōkrāntaka, the Lord in his eight-fold forms is seen. Immediate insight into the Divine reality is the aim of religion

Though Kālidāsa worshipped the Divine as Śiva, his attitude was not in any way exclusive or narrow-minded. He had the catholic attitude of traditional Hinduism²¹ He treated with great respect the views of others In Raghuwamśa, the gods approach Viṣṇu and praise him

O thou who didst create this All,
 Who dost preserve it, lest it fall,
 Who wilt destroy it and its ways —
 To thee, O triune Lord, be praise
 As into heaven's water run
 The tastes of earth—yet it is one,
 So thou art all the things that range
 The Universe, yet dost not change.
 Far, far removed, yet ever near,
 Untouched by passion, yet austere,
 Sinless, yet pitiful of heart,
 Ancient, yet free from age—Thou art,
 Though uncreate, thou seekest birth,
 Dreaming, thou watchest heaven and earth,
 Passionless, smitest low thy foes,
 Who knows thy nature, Lord? Who knows?
 Though many different paths, O Lord,
 May lead us to some great reward,
 They gather and are merged in thee
 Like floods of Ganges in the sea
 The saints who give Thee every thought,
 Whose every act for thee is wrought,
 Yearn for thine everlasting peace,
 For bliss with thee, that cannot cease
 Like pearls that grow in ocean's night,
 Like sunbeams radiantly bright,
 Thy strange and wonder-working ways,
 Defeat extravagance of praise
 If songs that to thy glory tend Should weary grow or take an end,

21 Yuan Chwang tells us that at the great festival of Prayāga, King Harṣa dedicated a statue to the Buddha on the first day, to the Sun the favourite deity of his father, on the second and to Śiva on the third.

Kālidāsa has sympathy with all forms of religion and is free from prejudice and fanaticism. Each person can tread the path which appeals to him,²³ for the different forms of Godhead are the manifestations of the One Supreme who is the formless behind all forms

Until the end of religion, the realisation of the Supreme, the ascent from the vanity of time is attained, we will have opportunities for making progress towards the goal. In this journey towards the end we will be governed by the law of karma. Kālidāsa accepts the theory of rebirth :

*ramyām vīksya madhurāmś ca nīsamya śabdān

Sītā, when rejected by Rāma, says

"When he is born, I'll score my queenly station
Gaze on the sun, and live a hell on earth,
That I may know no pain of separation
From you, my husband, in another birth"²⁸

This life is one stage in the path to perfection. Even as the present life is the result of our past deeds, we can shape our future by our efforts in this life. The world is under a moral government. The good will ultimately triumph. If we have no tragedies in Kālidāsa, it is because he affirms the ultimate reality of concord and decency. Subject to this conviction, he induces our sympathy for the hard lot of the majority of men and women.

Dharma

Kālidāsa's writings dispose of the misconception that the Hindu mind was attentive to transcendental matters, and neglectful of mundane affairs. Kālidāsa's range of experience was wide. He enjoyed life, people, pictures and flowers. He does not separate men from the cosmos and from the forces of religion. He knows the full range of human sorrow and desire, meagre joy and endless hope. He points to a harmony of the four main interests of human life, dharma, artha, kāma and moksa, the ethical, the economic, the artistic and the spiritual. The economic including the political and the artistic should be controlled by ethical norms. Ends and means are bound together. Life becomes livable only through valid ties. To cleanse and illuminate those ties was the poet's task.

28 R. XIV Ryder's E T 'He' refers to the child in her womb.

Describing the first king in Raghuvamśa, Kālidāsa says that Dilīpa's artha and kāma were centred in dharma

*apy artha-kāmau tasyāstām dharma eva manīṣinah.*²⁹

Kālidāsa did not feel called upon to choose between religion and morality on the one side and progress and security on the other. These are not hostile to each other.

History is not a natural but a moral phenomenon. It is not mere temporal succession. Its essence lies in the spiritual which informs the succession. The historian should penetrate and comprehend that inward moral dynamism. History is the work of man's ethical will of which liberty and creativity are the expressions.

The kings of the Raghu race were pure from birth, ruled over extensive domains stretching from earth to the ocean, āsamudra-ksitīśānam.³⁰ They amassed riches for charity, spoke measured words for the sake of truth, were eager for victory for the sake of glory and were householders for the sake of offspring. They gained knowledge in childhood, enjoyed the pleasures of life in youth, adopted the ascetic life in old age and in the end cast away their bodies by yoga or meditation.

There is time for study under a teacher, a period for married life and towards the end of life's journey we have to set our hearts on things eternal. In Vikramorvaśīya, the king tells his son that it is time he entered the second stage of the householder, after having completed the stage of studentship.

The kings collected revenues for the prosperity of their subjects, prajānām eva bhūtyartham,³³ even as the sun takes up water to give it back a thousand-fold. The rulers must stand up for dharma, justice. The king is the real father of the people, he educates them, protects them and provides for their livelihood, while the actual parents are only the causes of their physical birth.

*prajānām vinayādhānād rakṣaṇād bharanād aṇi

Every one in Aja's kingdom thought that he was a personal friend of the king :

aham eva mato mahīpater itī sarvāḥ prakṛtiśvacintayāt ³⁵

The ascetic tells the king in Śākuntala . " Your weapon is for the protection of the afflicted and not for striking at the innocent," ārta-trāṇāya vā śāstram na prahartum anāgaḥ,³⁶ Bharata, the son of Dusyanta and Śakuntalā, from whom this country takes its name is called sarvadamana—not merely one who conquered every ferocious beast of the forest but has achieved self-control also. Self-control is essential for rulership ³⁷

In Raghuvamśa,³⁸ Agnivarna gives himself to dissipation. He has so many mistresses that he cannot always call them by their right names. He develops a wasting disease, and as, even in that condition he is unable to resist the pleasures of the senses, he dies.

Kālidāsa gives us pictures of the saint and the sage, the hero and the heroine with their nobility. They are the directing minds within a civilisation. Nobility and self-control are their distinctive characteristics. Discipline is essential for a decent human life. Kālidāsa says : " Even though produced in a mine, *apy ākara samutpannā mani-jātaḥ asamskritā

In the spirit of the country, Kālidāsa exalts the quality of asceticism

Sama-pradhānesu tapo-dhanesu gūḍham hi dāhātmakam asti tejah

In hermits with tranquillity as the chief characteristic whose wealth is penance, there is, verily, concealed, consuming fiery energy ³⁹ Though Kālidāsa's works exalt austerity and adore saints and sages, he does not worship the begging bowl

The laws of dharma are not static and unchanging. The tradition of the past has to be interpreted by one's own insight and awareness. Tradition and individual experience interpenetrate. We are the inheritors of the past but are also trustees of the future. In the last analysis, each one must find the guide for one's conduct in the innermost centre of himself. When Arjuna in the opening chapter of the Bhagavadgītā declines to conform to the demands of society which impose on him as a kṣatriya the obligation to fight, when Socrates says, "Men of Athens, I will obey God rather than you," they are taking their stand on inward integrity rather than on outward conformity.

Kālidāsa tells us that in matters of doubt about one's duty, the authority is the voice of conscience, the wisdom of the heart .

fications of striking aspects of nature. The idea of retreat into nature, a mountain top or a forest hermitage, in search of the revelation of the spirit of the universe has been with us from early times. As human beings we have our roots in nature and participate in its life in many ways. The rhythm of night and day, changes of seasons suggest man's changing moods, variety and capriciousness. Nature had not become mechanical and impersonal for Kālidāsa. It had still its enchantment. His characters have a sensitive appreciation of plants and trees, of hills and rivers and a feeling of brotherhood for animals. We see in his writings flowers which bloom, birds which soar and animals which spring. We find a striking description of the love of the cow in *Raghuvamśa*⁴². The Rtu-saṁhāra gives a moving account of the six seasons. It reveals not only Kālidāsa's vision of nature's beauty but also an understanding of human moods and desires. In Śākuntala, when the curtain rises, Śākuntalā and her two friends are seen watering the plants, creepers and trees of Kanva's hermitage where the stars and colours in the sky, the pretty flowers and the lively animals are vital parts of human experience. Śākuntalā does not look upon nurturing the plants as a drudgery but finds joy in it.

"—not merely because my father has ordered it, I also have fraternal affection for them."

For Kālidāsa rivers, mountains, forests, trees possess a conscious individuality as animals, men and gods.

Śākuntalā is a child of nature. When she was abandoned by her amānuṣī mother, Menakā, the birds of the sky pick her up and rear her until the sage Kanva takes her under his fostering care. Śākuntalā tended the plants, watched them grow and bloom, and the occasions when they burst into blossoms and bore flowers and fruits were celebrated as festive days. Like a loving mother Śākuntalā reared up her pet animals and plants. No wonder they responded. On the occasion of Śākuntalā's wedding, trees sent their gifts, forest deities showered their blessings and cuckoos cooed aloud their joy.

The hermitage was filled with grief at the prospect of Śakuntalā's departure. The deer drop their mouthfuls, the peacocks stop their dancing and the creepers shed their leafy tears. Kanva says of her

pātum na prathamam vyavasyati jalam yusmāsu apītesu yā nādatte priyamandanāpi bhavatām snehena yā pallavam ādye vah kusuma-prasūti-samaye yasyā bhavaty utsavah seyam yāti śakuntalā patigriham sarvam anuñjāyatām

"She who never tries to drink water first when you have not drunk, who, though fond of decoration, does not out of affection for you pluck a blossom, whose great joy is at the period of the first appearance of blossom, even that Śakuntalā now departs to the house of her husband, let her be permitted by you all."

When Sītā is cast away, the peacocks abruptly stop their dance, the trees shed off flowers and the female deer throw away the half-chewed darbha grass from their mouths.

*antyam mayūnāḥ kusumāni viksāḥ darbhāḥ upātān vijahur harinyah
tasyāḥ prāpanne sama-duḥkha-bhāvam atyantam āsīd ruditam

Kālidāsa takes up an object and creates it to the eye. He had a strong visualising power. Look at the vivid description of the flight of the antelope which Dusyanta pursues to the hermitage :

*grīvābhangābhīrāmam muhuḥ anupatati syandane baddhadrstih paścārdhena pravistah śarapatanaḥkayād bhūyasā pūrvakāyam darbhāḥ ardhāvalīdharāḥ śramamvṛta-mukha-bhramśibhāḥ

paśyodagrabhutatvād viyati bahutaram stokam unvyām prayāti

"His glance fixed on the chariot ever and anon he leaps up gracefully bending his neck, through fear of the arrow's fall he draws ever his hinder part into the front of his body; he strews his path with the grass, half-chewed, which drops from his mouth opened in weariness , so much aloft he bounds that he runs rather in the air than on earth ”

Kālidāsa's knowledge of nature was not only accurate but sympathetic His observation was wedded to imagination His descriptions of the snows of the Himālayas, of the music of the mighty current of the Ganges, of the different animals illustrate his human heart and appreciation of natural beauty

No man can reach his full stature until he realises the dignity and worth of life that is not human We must develop sympathy with all forms of life The world is not made only for man

Love of Marriage

The love of man and woman attracted Kālidāsa and he lavished all his rich imagination in the description of the different kinds of love He does not suffer from any inhibitions⁴⁵ His women have a greater appeal than his men , for they reveal a timeless universal quality, whereas the men are dull and variable They live on the surface while the women suffer from the depths The competitiveness and self-assertion of the man may be useful in the office, factory or battlefield, but do not make for refinement, charm and serenity. The women keep the tradition alive with their love for order and harmony

When Kālidāsa describes feminine beauty, he adopts the conventional account and falls into the danger of sensuous engrossment and sometimes over-elaboration In Megha-dūta, the Yakṣa gives a description of his wife to the cloud :—

*tanvī, śyāmā, śikhari-daśanā, pakva-bimbādharaṣṭhī,

Her waist is measurable by the palm of the hand and her hips are broad and the feet have curved toes and her body is fashioned to suit exactly the fancy of the mind of a dancing master."

He gives us here a pen picture of a typical dancing girl which may well make a painter envy."

In the gallery of women Kālidāsa presents, we have many interesting types. For many of them the conventional pretences and defences of society did not work. Their sensitive natures were not adjusted to social expectations. Their conflicts and tensions called for integration. The men felt certain and were secure. They accepted polygamy as the normal rule. But Kālidāsa's women had imagination and understanding and so were victims of doubt and indecision. As a rule they were not fickle but trustful, sincere and loving.

46 In Śiṅgāra tilaka, sometimes attributed to Kālidāsa, we find the following - indīvarṇa nayanam, mukham ambujena, kundena dantam, adharam nava-pallavena, amgāni campakadulāh sa vidhāya vedhāh, kānte katham ghaṭitavān upalena cetah

"Your eyes are like blue lotuses, your face like a lotus, your teeth are like jasmine, your lower lip is like a tender shoot, your limbs are like the leaves of the Campaka, tell me then beloved, how the Creator formed your heart of stone"

In Raghuvamśa King Dilīpa lives the highest ideal of family life with his queen Sudakṣiṇī. Agnivarna, the last king in the Raghuvamśa is a prey to lust and degradation. In between are Raghu, Aja and Indumatī, Daśaratha with his three queens, Rāma and Sitā and many others. Indumatī married Aja in a Svayamvara choosing him from among a number of suitors.

Love is deepened by hardships and sufferings borne for the sake of love. It grows a hundred-fold in its intensity by obstacles to its realisation even as the current of a river blocked on its way by uneven rocks (flows with greater force)

In Mālavikāgnimitra, the queen is called Dhāminī because she bears everything. She has dignity and forbearance. When Mālavikā attracts the notice of the king in a dance scene which the clown has contrived, she rebukes the king in words of harsh satire that such efficiency would be of advantage if shown in affairs of the state yadi rājakāryesu api ūḍiṣi upāya-nipuṇa-tāryaputrasya talaḥ śobhanam bhavet.⁵³ When her husband's affection shifted to Irāvati and then to Mālavikā, her devotion to him persists. The parivāṇikā, Kausikī observes "These noble women attached to their lords serve them even though it be against their own desires."

By a series of misfortunes, Kauśikī is led to the religious life. She comforts and distracts the mind of Dhārīnī. Though a nun, she is an authority on the dance and the cure for snake-bite.

Irāvati is passionate, impetuous, suspicious, demanding and dictatorial. When she was abandoned in favour of Mālavikā by the King, she bitterly complains and rebukes the King in harsh words. "How immodest of feeling is my lord?" aho avinīla hrdayo' yam āyaputrah 'You wicked one, you are absolutely untrustworthy' śatha, avīśvasanīya-hrdayo'si "Oh! These men are untrustworthy by nature. We, like innocent deer snared by the music of the hunter, fall victims to their deceitful words and do not understand.

Agnimitra's love for Mālavikā is of the sensual type. The king is fascinated by the beauty and grace of the maid.

In Vikramorvasīya, we have a blend of the human and the super-human. The nun Kāśirājaputrī is first restless and petulant. When she finds that Urvaśī is a heavenly Apsaras, she acquiesces in her lot. The Queen Auśinārī is portrayed as the ideal Hindu wife who gives up her own happiness for that of her husband. The clown remarks whether she was not making a virtue of necessity, spitting out sour grapes on the principle abhāve vīaktih. She rebukes the clown "Fool, my lord is so dear to me that even at the risk of putting an end to my pleasure, I wish him all happiness" aham khalv ātmanah sukhāvasānenāyaputram murtasāñnam kartum icchāmi. She lived on friendly terms with Urvaśī and the queen's attitude had its reward and Urvaśī pays her respect and precedence. Urvaśī asks her son to bow to the elder mother before entering on the second stage of the householder - - ekī,

55. III. The Bengali heroine Mālañcamāla whose husband had married a second time and left her unloved and forgotten says "Though I die now and become a bird or a lesser creature or whatever befall me, I care not, for I have seen my darling happy."

vatsa, jyestha-mātaram abhivandasva Urvaśī's character is somewhat removed from normal life. She has power to watch her lover unseen and overhear his conversations. She is lacking in maternal affection, for she abandons her child rather than lose her husband. Her love is selfish and her transformation is the direct outcome of a fit of insane jealousy.

Furūiavas sings in rapturous terms of love and says that the sovereignty of the world is not as sweet, as blissful, as the lover's labour at the feet of the beloved⁶⁶. The world is dark and desolate to whom love is denied but it is bright and blissful to love triumphant.

Goethe's lines about Śākuntala are well-known :

"Wouldst thou the young year's blossoms and the fruits of its decline,
And all by which the soul is charmed, enraptured,
feasted, fed,
Wouldst thou the earth and heaven itself in one sole name combine ?

I name thee, O Śākuntala, and all at once is said "

In this play we have the development of blossom into fruit, of earth into heaven, of passion based on physical attraction into love based on moral beauty and spiritual understanding. Śākuntalā inherits from her mother Menakā, beauty and lightheartedness, and from her father Viśvāmitra, the famous ascetic, patient and forgiving love. Freedom of sense and austerity of life brought her into being. In her own life the two, freedom and restraint, earth and heaven should combine.

In the first Act we find all the impulsiveness of youth. The daughter of the hermitage in the first outburst of passion gave herself away in simple innocence and complete trust to the king. She followed the unsuspecting path of nature as she had not learned to control her feelings and regulate her life by norms :

śrūyante paritātās tāḥ pitr̥bhiḥ cābhinanditāḥ*

"Many daughters of royal sages are heard to have been married by the Gandharva form of marriage and they have received the approval of their fathers" 57 Kanva when he hears of the marriage blesses it Kālidāsa in verses of tender sorrow describes her departure from the hermitage to her husband's place The very trees bid farewell to Sakuntalā in loving kindness Kanva is filled with sorrow

*yāsyaty adya śakuntaleḥ hrdayam somspṛṣtam utkanthayā

"At the thought that Sakuntalā will leave this very day my heart is smitten with grief my voice is choked with suppressed tears, my sight is dulled by anxious thought If so great is the affliction through affection of even me a forest-dweller, how much more are householders tormented by fresh griefs at separation from their daughters"

Kanva gives her advice

*śuśrūṣasva gurūn kuru priyasakhivṛttim sapatnījane

"Serve your elders, take to the behaviour of a dear friend to your co-wives Even though wronged by your husband, do not, out of anger, be of refractory spirit, be ever courteous to your attendants, do not become arrogant in prosperity. Thus do young women attain the status of housewife, those of an opposite character are banes of the family"

kalatram Śakuntala suffered the worst that could happen to a devoted wife. She is disowned by her husband and disgraced. Her mind becomes vacant and she stands there lonely, filled with terror, anguish and despair. The poet narrates her endurance of desertion, her fortitude in suffering, her later disciplined life till she is restored to her husband. Love is not a mere affair of the senses, it is a kinship of spirit. Both Dusyanta and Śakuntalā suffered, were disciplined by sorrow, and obtained the reward of a spiritual harmony. The youthful flush subsides, the gust of passion dies out. Love is won at a higher level and the brief glow of pleasure is turned into a steady life of bliss. Passion is linked with the sanctities of life. Nature and grace blend in harmony.

Kālidāsa does not judge the first union of lovers as a moral lapse. They are not sinners but they have to grow through suffering.

When Pārvatī approached Śiva performing tapas with the object of marrying him and started to serve him in different ways, Śiva was unmoved.

The marriage of the two was essential for the birth of Kumāra, who would save the world from the terror and destruction which the demon Tāraka was forcing on it. So Indra sent the god of love, Kāma to disturb the concentration of Śiva. When Kāma approached Śiva, the latter was sitting with closed eyes, his senses withdrawn in samādhi, still like a rainless cloud, like a waveless ocean, like an unflickering flame.

When Śiva was disturbed somewhat, he opened his eyes and fire flashed from his third eye and reduced Kāma to ashes. In the meantime Pārvatī felt that her beauty was of little use.

The truth illustrated here is that love born of sense attraction should be transformed into love based on austerity and control. While striving to reach heaven, both Pārvatī and Śakuntalā had to skirt the edge of the abyss.

Sex life is not inconsistent with spiritual attainment. Wild life or unrestrained passion is inconsistent with it. Sex life under law and restraint is spiritual in character. One can lead the life of a householder and yet be a hermit in temper. The Upaniṣad says: enjoy by renunciation, tyaktena bhujjīthāh.

The goal of life is joy, serenity and not pleasure or happiness. Joy is the fulfilment of one's nature as a human being. We must affirm our being against the whole world, if need be. When Socrates was condemned to death or when Jesus was crucified, they did not take death as defeat but as fulfilment of their ideals. The aim of love is a happy harmony of man and woman. The concept of ardhanārīśvara brings it out.⁶⁴ The wife does not belong to the husband but makes a whole with him. The wife is the root of all social welfare.

Kālidāsa believes that marriage is fulfilled in parenthood. The physical attraction is sublimated through suffering caused by misunderstanding, separation, desertion, cruelty etc. and attains its fulfilment in the child. The marriage of Śiva and Pārvatī was brought about for the birth of Kumāra. This country is named after Bharata, the son of Duśyanta and Śakuntalā. In Raghuvamśa, it is said that the love of Dilipa and Sudakṣinā attained increase when it was shared by the son also.

In Raghuvamśa III 23, Kālidāsa says that Dilīpa and Sudakṣiṇā rejoiced in the birth of their son even as Umā and Śiva were gratified by the birth of Kūrttikeya, as Śacī and Indira by the birth of Jayanta.⁶⁶ The marriage of Duśyanta and Śakuntalā found its fulfilment in the birth of their son Bharata. The birth of Kumāra was the main aim of the marriage of Śiva and Pārvatī. Kālidāsa loves children as it is evident from his descriptions of Bharata, Āyus, Raghu, Kumāra.

For Kālidāsa the path of wisdom lies in the harmonious pursuit of the different aims of life and the development of an integral personality. He impresses on our mind these ideals by the magic of his poetry, the richness of his imagination, his profound knowledge of human nature and his delicate descriptions of its most tender emotions. We can apply to him the words of Miranda in the Tempest:

O Wonder,
 How many goodly creatures are there here '
 How beauteous mankind is ' O brave new world,
 That has such people in't

INTRODUCTION

INTRODUCTION

Ever since the editio princeps of the Megha-dūta was published by Horace Hayman Wilson at Calcutta in 1813, the poem has been printed, edited and translated very often in India and abroad. Its great popularity and currency are also indicated by the existence of a large number of original manuscripts in the different libraries of India, Europe and America, as well as by the fact that more than fifty Sanskrit commentaries on this poem are known, of which the more important ones are now available in print.

Editions of the Text

From Aufrecht's description¹ of the manuscript on which Wilson's earliest edition was based, it appears that it was most probably copied from the comparatively modern Colebrooke manuscript (no 3774/1584) existing in the India Office Library.² Written in Bengali characters, this manuscript of the text contains, along with Mallinātha's Samjivani, five Bengal commentaries, namely, those of Saṅātana Gosvāmin (Tātparya-dīpikā), Kalyāṇamalla (Mālatī), Bharata-mallika (Subhodhā), Rāmanātha Tarkālamkāra (Muktāvalī), and Haragovinda Vācaspati (Samgatā)³. A glance through our critical notes will show how closely Wilson's text, prepared at Wilson gives a free English metrical translation and some notes — Full Bibliography of editions etc., mentioned below, will be found in our Select Bibliography.

Calcutta, follows the readings of the Bengal commentators, especially those of Sanātana Gosvāmin and Bharata-mallika. Although Wilson had Mallinātha's better known commentary before him, there can be no doubt that he represents, mostly in his readings, the tradition of the Bengal commentators of the text.

The edition of J Gildemeister, which came out at Bonn in 1841, was based chiefly on a collation of Wilson's text with three other manuscripts, two of which (Devanāgarī and Bengali) came from Paris and one (Bengali) from Copenhagen.⁴ This edition (of the text only) is more critical, and excludes as spurious a number of stanzas from the traditional text of the Megha-dūta. In India Mallinātha's commentary, with the text, began to be printed — first at Benares in 1849, then at Calcutta (Madan Mohan Tarkalamkar) in 1850, at Madras (in Telugu characters) in 1859 and at Poona (Krishna Shastri Bhatavadekar) in 1866. In 1869 Ishwari Chandra Vidyasagar brought out at Calcutta a careful edition of the text with Mallinātha's commentary in Devanāgarī characters.⁵ He might have been aware of Wilson's edition of the text, but there is no indication that he knew that of Gildemeister. Already Mallinātha had declared the spurious character of several stanzas; Vidyasagar's edition is notable for marking out a few more,⁶ as well as for its appendix (written in Sanskrit) which contains useful critical notes and various readings culled chiefly from Bengal commentators. Adolf Friedrich

4 This is the MS (without number), dated 1826 A.D., written in Bengali characters and containing 117 stanzas, in the Royal Library of Copenhagen, which is described in N. L. Westergaard's Catalogue (Copenhagen 1846), p. 13b, no. 111. It contains the Śṛṅgāratilaka (23 verses), which also Gildemeister includes in his edition (see his Preface, pp. vi-vii).

5. The Preface only is written in Bengali.

6 We are informed in the Preface that Vidyasagar utilized for his text the Benares, Calcutta and Bombay editions, as well as a MS from the Calcutta Sanskrit College Library. These source-texts contained respectively 121, 118, 125 and 116 stanzas, but even with such meagre and uncertain material Vidyasagar had the critical acumen to declare that only 110 stanzas were genuine — Vidyasagar was elected Honorary Member of the Royal Asiatic Society in 1865 (JRAS, 1865, p. 15).

Stenzler utilized all this material and published his well-known edition (of the text only) at Breslau in 1874. In addition to Gildemeister's one Devanāgarī and two Bengali manuscripts, Stenzler utilized only one more Devanāgarī manuscript from Berlin (Chambers 152), but his edition is notable for its critical sense, as well as for its notes which cite (following Vidyasagar) from the five Bengal commentaries mentioned above

In India Mallinātha's text and commentary continued to be printed ; but one need mention only the editions of Kashinath Pandurang Parab (Bombay 1877) and Gopal Raghunath Nandargikar (Bombay 1894). It is not known on what material the text of Parab is based, but Nandargikar gives a detailed account of the manuscripts, editions and commentaries utilized, and fully notes variant readings from them. Besides Wilson and Vidyasagar, he used the text and commentary printed at Calcutta, respectively by Ajit Nath Bhattacharya (1870) and Pandit Pranānath, a Kashmir Brahman (1871), as well as the Poona edition of Krishna Shastri Bhatavadekar (1866). But it is important to note that Nandargikar, for the first time, collated and recorded the readings of a very large number of manuscripts (some twenty), including those containing six commentaries, mostly Jaina. They are the anonymous Sāṃoddhārṇī and Megha-latā, the Śīśya-hitasūnī of Lakṣmī-nivāsa, the Sukha-bodhikā of Mahāmasīmha-gaṇi, the Sugamānvayā of Sumativijaya and the Subodhikā of Megharāja.⁷ The India Office manuscript, mentioned above, containing the five Bengal commentaries, was also consulted for their exposition, but their variants were not noted, or noted only incidentally in the copious explanatory notes. It is interesting, however, to find that Nandargikar utilized and recorded the readings of Jināsena's Pārśvābhyudaya, whose early testimony he considers to be of a higher authority. But unfortunately he used a defective Devanāgarī copy (which can now be identified with Hultzsich's manuscript D) of Vallabhadeva's

7. The MSS of all these unpublished commentaries are now available in the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute (BORI) at Poona. See below

Pañnkā, and could not realize its importance from the point of view of textual criticism. A critical reader may find it difficult to agree with Nandargikar's opinion (p. 27) that "the text that Mallinātha has commented upon is generally the true text of the poet", but it must be said to the credit of Nandargikar's patient scholarship that the material furnished by his critical apparatus, prepared from a large number of manuscripts (with or without commentary), is certainly of great assistance for the critical study of the text.

The second stage in the history of textual criticism of the Megha-dūta begins with the publication, at London in 1911, of E. Hultsch's critical edition of the Pañnkā commentary of Vallabhadeva, who is our oldest known commentator on Kālidāsa's poem. The text here is in accordance with this commentary, which is edited on the basis of three Śāradā (-Kashmiri) manuscripts and one Devanāgarī manuscript, the last of which (marked D) is identical with that used by Nandargikar. Hultsch is right in holding that this last manuscript is highly conflated and in consequently basing his edition of the Kashmiri text of Vallabhadeva on his three Kashmiri manuscripts. Hultsch accepts the view of Durgaprasad and Parāś⁸ that Vallabhadeva flourished in the first half of the tenth century, but K. B. Pathak, who adversely criticizes Hultsch's dating as well as his estimate of the commentary, would bring down the date to about 1100 A. D. Whatever may be the date,⁹ there cannot be any doubt, that Vallabhadeva is a fairly old, and to us the earliest known, commentator, and his text, therefore, deserves most careful consideration.

Adaptations and Translations

Earlier than Vallabhadeva's commentary, we have the *Pārśvābhyaṇḍaya*¹⁰ of Jināsena which, in the latter part of the eighth century, incorporated, by the ingenious device of Samasyā-pūraṇa, the whole text of the Megha-dūta as it was known to him This work is a poetical biography of the Jaina saint Pārśvanātha ; but by the said device each stanza in Jinasena's poem employs unaltered one or two Pādas from the Megha-dūta, the remaining Pādas being composed by Jinasena himself. The text of the Megha-dūta, thus adapted in this Jaina poem, was edited and published¹¹ by Kashinath Bapu Pathak at Poona in 1894. This is a valuable testimony, because it represents the text of the Megha-dūta as it was known to Jinasena "in the latter part of the 8th century or before Śaka 705 (= c 783 A D), the date of his first work the Jaina Harivamśa"¹² One may not agree with Pathak's exaggerated opinion of its absolute value and his consequent depreciation of Vallabhadeva's commentary, but the text-critic should certainly take into account the testimony of Jinasena's early adaptation

Similar assistance to textual criticism, but in a lesser degree, is also rendered by two other Jaina works The first is the Nemi-dūta of Vikrama, son of Sāṅgana, which, as its name implies, is a devotional poem in 126 stanzas in honour of the Tīrthamkara Neminātha It was published in 1886 in Kāvya-mālā, gucchaka 11 It describes the sending of the cloud as a messenger by the saint's wife Rājamatī to her husband, who had gone to Mount Abu to practise penance But the fourth Pāda of every stanza of this poem employs sequentially the fourth Pāda of the corresponding stanza of the Megha-dūta The date of the author is not known,¹³ but since he appears to utilize a very conflated and late version of the text, his date cannot be very early, nor is his testimony very valuable The second work is the Śīla-dūta,¹⁴ a didactic poem in 131 stanzas on the story of Sthūlabhadra, written by Cāritra-sundara-gaṇi in Saṃvat 1487 (= c 1431 A D) It employs

12. Pathak, 2nd ed., p xxiii Pathak, however, thinks that the Pārśvābhyudaya was composed shortly after Śaka 735 (= c 813 A D) Jinasena's Adipurāṇa was probably written about Śaka 760 (= c 838 A D) See Nandargikar, p 6

the Samasyā-pūraṇa device in a manner exactly similar to that of Nemi-dūta, with which it agrees in not being very discriminating with regard to doubtful verses ¹⁵

In addition to these adaptations, we have a paraphrase and a translation of Kālidāsa's poem. A Sinhalese Sannaya or word-for-word paraphrase of the Megha-dūta was casually discovered by William Gunatilake in the Oriental Library at Kandy and published along with the Sanskrit text by T. B. Pānabokke at Colombo in 1893. From its readings, ¹⁶ it appears to be a fairly late work, but it bears witness to the text as it became current in Ceylon. The Tibetan translation of the Megha-dūta, contained in the Tanjur, was edited and translated into German by Hermann Beckh ¹⁷ in 1907, who also wrote an interesting doctoral dissertation on the text-problem of the Megha-dūta on the basis of the Tibetan translation ¹⁸. Beckh is of opinion that the translation belongs to the thirteenth century A. D.

Commentaries

Of the commentaries later than Vallabhadeva we have already spoken of Mallinātha and his widely popular Samjivani commentary ¹⁹. Mallinātha, a South Indian, has been assigned to the latter part or the end of the fourteenth century. But even before this date we have the South Indian commentary of Dakṣiṇāvarta-nātha who is cited by Mallinātha himself,²⁰ and whose commentary Pradīpa was made available in print in the Trivandrum Sanskrit Series in 1919. Earlier than this, in 1909, was published another South Indian commentary, the Vidyullatā of Pūrṇa-sarasvatī, from the Vanivilas Press, Srirangam. The date of the work is uncertain, but in the Preface to the printed edition we are informed, rather vaguely, that the commentator "seems to have lived some three centuries ago"²¹ in the state of Cochin. Another scholiast from Cochin is Parameśvara (between 1400 and 1500 A D), whose Sumanoramanī commentary (which exists in a shorter and a longer recension) was published by the Travancore University Manuscripts Library from Trivandrum in 1946. It shows familiarity with the commentary of Pūrṇa-sarasvatī and is thus of not much independent value for our purpose, except as confirming the particular text-tradition.²² commentary of Sāsvata ²¹) and the Subodhā of Bharata-mallika have been recently published,²⁵ but already Vidyasagar and Stenzler, in the appendix to their editions, give some variant readings selected from these as well as from the other Bengal commentaries of Kalyānamalla, Rāmanātha Taikālamkāra and Haragovinda Vācaspati. Of these commentators, Sanātana was an older contemporary and disciple of Caitanya. His commentary was probably written in the latter part of the fifteenth century before he renounced the world and began his theological labours at Vrndāvana ²⁶. The portion of his commentary on the stanzas occurring after 66, however, is meagre, because the author, taking them to be easy (sugamam), did not care to explain them ²⁷. Kalyānamalla (called a Rājarsi in the colophon to his manuscript), son of Gajamalla of the Padmabandhu family, appears to have been a local chief of Bhūriśrestha ²⁸ and patron of Bharata-mallika, but his commentary does not always agree in its readings of the text with 21 Sāsvata must have been a fairly old writer, the only MS of his commentary (A S B no 1953/561b) bearing the date in Nevāri era 510 (= c 1330 A D). But there is no indication that he really belonged to Bengal. On the contrary, the Nevāri script of the MS may be taken as going against such an assumption. The second introductory verse of his commentary, quoted by Rajendralal Mitra (Notices, viii, p 187, no 2740, the MS noticed is in Devanāgarī), speaks of Vallabha's commentary as authoritative, and in many cases Sāsvata's readings do not agree with those of the Bengal commentators. Even if his exact provenance is not known, it is probable that he belonged to some region in Eastern India -- The A S B (Asiatic Society of Bengal) MS is fragmentary and is wanting in many folios.

15. We include the readings of the Nemi-dūta in our critical apparatus and note variants from the Sila-dūta only occasionally — A work of the same type is the Megha-samuccaya or Megha-dūta-samasyā-lekhā of the Jaina Meghavijaya (ed. Jaina Ātmānanda Grantha-mālā, Bhavnagar 1914), in which the cloud is sent as a messenger to the author's preceptor Vijayaprabha Sūri, but it is a comparatively late work of the seventeenth century and follows the established Jaina tradition of the text. All these works must be distinguished from the Jaina-Megha-dūta (ed. ibid., Bombay 1891) which is an independent poem in four cantos, written in imitation of the Megha-dūta by Merutunga in the first half of the fourteenth century.

26 The work contains no Namaskriyā to Caitanya. See S K De, Vaiṣṇava Faith and Movement, Calcutta 1942, pp 116, 119-21.

27 See our notes on 66 -- Makaranda Miśra, who is taken to be another Bengali commentator, probably lived like Sāsvata in a region adjoining Bengal. The MS of his commentary (A S B, no 1955/107b), entitled Megha-saudāmanī, is in Devanāgarī characters. He includes *1 -- *4, *11 -- *13 but excludes *5 -- *10, *14 -- *19, the total number of stanzas being 118.

28 Mentioned by Kṛṣṇa-Miśra in his Prabodha-candrodaya and identified with the once flourishing Bhursut Pergunna in the district of Burdwan, Bengal.

those of his protégé Of Rāmanātha Tarkālamkāra, apparently a modern writer, no information is available, but Haragovinda Vācaspati, son of Vañka-vihārī Gaṅgopādhyāya of Krishnanagar, must have been a modern author perhaps of a still later date²⁹ Bharata-mallika's Subodhā is a remarkable commentary, full and erudite Its date is uncertain. Its editor would place it at 1675-76 A D ; but we are inclined to agree with Colebrooke³⁰ and Rajendralal Mitra³¹ that Bharata-mallika flourished in the middle of the eighteenth century Bharata-mallika, otherwise Bharata-sena, son of Gaurāṅga-mallika, was a Bengali Vaidya or physician by caste. He was a voluminous scholiast who commented on the standard Mahākāvya including those of Kālidāsa. Even if his commentary on the Meghadūta is comparatively recent in date, it is interesting because he gives a less interpolated text, and represents the Bengal tradition³² better even than Sanātana and Kalyānamalla. We have recorded his readings, along with those of Sanātana ; but those of Śāśvata and Kalyānamalla are only occasionally cited by us³³

29 The commentaries are contained in the India Office MS no 3774/1584, mentioned above, but separate MSS of some of them also exist in the libraries of the India Office and Asiatic Society of Bengal — Keith identifies our Haragovinda Vācaspati with the author of Jñāpakāvalī which belongs to the Samkṣiptasāra grammar

30 Ed Amarakośa p 6.

31 In his Notices (vi, p 145) he writes in 1882 that Bharata-mallika "lived at Kanchrapara in the Hooghly district about 150 years ago" Haraprasad Shastri endorses this view and says that he had seen Bharata-mallika's great-grandson Lokanātha-mallika (Catalogue, vi, 1931, p 307)

32 The greater reliability of this tradition is shown by the fact that Sanātana excludes *3 — *12 *15 — *19, including only *1 — *2 and *13 — *14, but Bharata-mallika goes further in excluding *14 Kalyānamalla agrees with Sanātana in this respect, but he includes *19 also — The readings of these commentaries are not recorded by Nandargikar

33 We could not obtain a copy of the Aṛiṭha-bodhinī commentary of Kaviratna Cakravartin which was printed in Bengali characters at Calcutta in 1850 But we have seen the A S B MS of this commentary no 4956/10802 There is nothing remarkable about its readings, but its text contains 115 stanzas

There are also a few commentaries which are not yet in print. Of these, we have here recorded the readings of only the Vidvajjanāmnaññī ³⁴ of Sarasvatītirtha, which we believe to be a commentary older certainly than that of Mallinātha and probably than those of Cāṇtravardhana and Dakṣiṇāvarta. If this Sarasvatītirtha is, as he seems to be, identical with Narhari Sarasvatītirtha, he is an Āndhrīa scholiast, who should be placed in the latter half of the thirteenth century ³⁵. Leaving aside the commentary of Sthiradeva, of whom we shall speak presently, the earliest Jaina commentary, which has been printed, ³⁶ seems to be that of Cāṇtravardhana, son of Rāmacandra Bhīṣaj, who commented also upon the two other Kāvyaś of Kālidāsa, and who had the title Vidyādhara or Sāhitya-vidyādhara. Nandargikar would place him before Divākara whose commentary on the Raghu-vamśa is dated 1385 A D. Both Sumativijaya and Mahimāsmha-gaṇi, who wrote respectively the Sugamānvayā ³⁷ and the Sukha-bodhikā ³⁸ commentaries, are Jaina authors who belonged probably to the latter part of the seventeenth century³⁹ Their commentaries, which are still in manuscript, appear to follow (more than that of Cāritravardhana) the conflated Jaina tradition of the text and are, therefore, of not much independent value The *Sisya-hitaśinī*⁴⁰ of Lakṣmīnivāsa, son of Śrīraṅga and pupil of Ratnaprabha-sūri, is another Jaina commentary of the same type composed before 1458 A. D. The Avacūri of Kanakakīrtigaṇi, a manuscript of which is dated 1462 A. D.,⁴¹ was printed in lithograph from Benares in 1867, but it is in the same way not valuable for textual study. The *Sāroddhārīnī*⁴² is a commentary of uncertain date and authorship, which Pathak (p. xxi) regards as "next only to Mallinātha's work in point of merit", but its importance need not on that account be exaggerated from the text-critical point of view There are a few other commentaries of the same type, like the anonymous *Megha-latā*⁴³ or Megharāja's Subodhikā or Sukhabodhikā,⁴⁴ which need not similarly be taken seriously into account. The readings of all these commentaries (except that of Cāritravardhana) are already noted by Nandargikar and Pathak and need not be recorded again, we have, however, occasionally noticed in our critical notes interesting readings from some of them An exception, however, is to be made in favour of

The name of the commentary does not appear, but his commentary on Raghu is called Sau-hitaśmī. P. K. Goda (ABORI, xv, pp. 109-11) agrees with Nandargikar's dating (Introd. to Raghu, p. 9) but sets the upper limit at 1172 A D. — We have fully recorded Cāṇtravardhana's readings.

D.) Mahāmasmha-gaṇi's commentary was composed, as the colophon of one of his MSS states, in Samvat 1693 (= c. 1637 A. D.) Mahāmasmha was a pupil of Śivanidhāna of the Kharatara-gaccha

Sthiradeva's *Bāla-prabodhinī*⁴⁵ commentary, the readings of which we have fully noted. As his name indicates, he may have been a Jaina author, who is mentioned by name along with Vallabhadeva and Asaha or Āsaha (Āśada) by the commentator Janārdana,⁴⁶ and who is sometimes reproduced in extenso by the Sūroddhārinī. Sthiradeva's date and provenance, however, are unknown. There is little evidence to show that he is, as his editor presumes, earlier than Vallabhadeva, but since Janārdana's date⁴⁷ lies between 1192 and 1385 A D, he would be our earliest known Jaina (?) commentator on the Megha-dūta. His commentary, however, contrary to later Jaina tradition, presents the text as containing only 112 stanzas, of which one (41) is declared spurious by himself.⁴⁸

It should be clearly understood that we are not concerned here with the intrinsic merit of the commentaries, but we consider them in so far as they are of importance in determining Kālidāsa's text. They furnish the accumulated testimonia by which we can attempt to go back to the poet's original, even though it might have been, more or less, overlaid and modified 45 Ed from one MS (dated Samvat 1521 = c. 1465 A D) in the Mandlik collection of the Fergusson College, Poona, by V G Paranjpe, Poona 1936. We have also consulted two MSS from the Baroda Oriental Institute (nos 1408, 12266). They designate the commentary simply as Tikā. Both the MSS are incomplete, — the first beginning with comments on 11, the second with those on 65. The date of the first MS is illegible, but the second was written in Samvat 1630 (= c. 1574 A D). These later versions of the commentary contain a large number of spurious stanzas, the first admitting 7, the second 13. The Tanjore Sarasvatī Mahal Library MS is dated Samvat 1656 = c. 1600 A D, but curiously enough, the number of stanzas it gives appears to be only 106! Paranjpe's MS presents the text as containing 112 stanzas, one of which is declared spurious by the commentator himself. We have accepted the numbering of this earliest MS.

through centuries by scholastic ingenuity. Our concern here is to find out, if possible, what the poet himself wrote, and not what a particular scholiast thinks that he wrote

Manuscripts

We now turn to the manuscripts of Megha-dūta and consider the importance of their evidence. From what we have said above about the various editions of the text and commentaries it will be clear that a very large number of manuscripts from Western, Eastern and Southern India, as well as from Kashmir, London, Paris, Berlin and Copenhagen,⁴⁹ have already been utilized in them and the necessary variants brought to light. On a rough calculation something like forty manuscripts are found already utilized in this way, and from a careful scrutiny of this mass of accumulated material it would appear that further collation of fresh manuscripts of the same type would not prove very fruitful in improving the text.⁵⁰ As a matter of fact, after noting variants from the different standard editions of the text and commentaries, we did collate some Bengali and Devanāgarī manuscripts (independent of commentaries), and took into account the readings of South Indian manuscripts collated by Foulkes,⁵¹ but the readings we found from all these sources did not add much of importance to those which we had already noted from the editions of the text and commentaries. It is true that no two manuscripts, unless they are exact copies of each other, are entirely identical ;

49 The manuscripts in America, as listed by Poleman (Indic Manuscripts in the United States and Canada), are not many, nor do they seem to have more than ordinary importance

50 Rajavaidya J. K. Shastri, for instance, in his recent edition of the Megha-dūta (Gondal 1953), claims to have collated seven fresh MSS, but the variants noted by him are such as are already found given by one or other of the commentators or by manuscripts utilized in previous editions

51. T. Foulkes Kālidāsa, A complete Collection of the various Readings of the Madras Manuscripts, vol. 1, Madras 1904. Foulkes utilized one Grantha, two Telugu, and three Kanarese manuscripts, but unfortunately he records too many obvious scribal blunders along with genuine variants. We have occasionally noted from Foulkes some interesting variant readings because every scribe makes his own mistakes, indulges in petty alterations, emends, transposes, or interpolates verses here and there. But once the text-tradition of a particular class or group of manuscripts is established, the deviations of fresh manuscripts of the same class or group are, on the whole, found too insignificant to justify further collation of manuscripts of that class.

We collated, for instance, five Bengali manuscripts (without commentaries) of the Calcutta Sanskrit College Library,⁵² but we found that their readings did not differ materially from those of the Bengal commentators. Similarly, the collation of some independent Devanāgarī manuscripts of the Asiatic Society of Bengal and the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute showed that they followed generally the readings of one or other of the West Indian commentators. With regard to the total number of stanzas contained in these manuscripts, we find that of the four complete Bengali manuscripts of the Calcutta Sanskrit College, two (nos 119 and 121) give 116 (each including *16 as the last stanza) and two (nos 120 and 123) 114 each — which numbers correspond to those given by the Bengal commentators. On the other hand, the two Devanāgarī manuscripts of the text only of the Asiatic Society of Bengal⁵³ contain respectively a total of 125 and 127 stanzas, both including even *19. There are four Devanāgarī manuscripts without commentary⁵⁴ and five with brief anonymous glosses⁵⁵ in the Bhandarkar Institute. Some of them are fairly old, the dates ranging between 1461 and 1586 A. D., but all of them, following generally the tradition of the West-Indian (especially Jaina) commentators, contain so many spurious

54. No 43 of 1873-74 (undated but old) — 125, but no 141 of 1882-83 (dated 1556 A. D.), no. 156 of 1882-83 (dated 1586 A. D.), no 388 of 1884-87 (dated 1461 A. D.) each — 126 stanzas

55. No 550 of 1891-95 (undated but old) — 125, but no 347 of 1895-98, no 744 of 1886-92, and no 746 of 1886-92 each — 126, no 343 of 1895-98 — 127 stanzas verses that the total number of stanzas comes up to 125, 126 or even 127.

It would be interesting to note in this connexion that most Devanāgarī and Bengali manuscripts in the European libraries are generally of the same character. The three Devanāgarī manuscripts of only the text in the India Office,⁵⁶ which are dated between 1557 and 1624 A. D., contain a total number of stanzas between 121 and 125, while a Bengali manuscript of the text gives 116 stanzas. Most of the Bodleian Library Devanāgarī manuscripts⁵⁷ similarly contain 125 to 127 stanzas. The Berlin State Library manuscript (Chambers 152) in Devanāgarī, which Stenzler used, contains 127 stanzas, while the Devanāgarī manuscript no 1544, with an anonymous Avacūri,⁵⁸ includes 125 (even accepting *19). The British Museum Devanāgarī manuscript no. 225/Or 2145c, with Avacūri, appears to have been copied⁵⁹ from the same source as the Berlin manuscript no 1544, and contains a total of 125 stanzas. It is true that Gildemeister's Devanāgarī manuscript D from Paris contains only 110 stanzas, but his Bengali manuscript from Copenhagen has 117. The two Leipzig University Devanāgarī manuscripts of the text only (no 411 dated 1566 A. D. and no 415 dated about 1860 A. D.) contain respectively a total number of 127 and 124 stanzas. Among the Florentine manuscripts noticed by Aufrecht there are two manuscripts of the same type (no. 73-74), each of which contains 125 stanzas. A. A. Macdonell reports⁶⁰ a Nepali manuscript of the text only from the library of the Maharaja of Nepal, dated 1364 A D, which contains 110 stanzas, but, curiously enough, it includes nine of the spurious verses⁶¹

56 No 3770/3060 (dated 1557 A. D.) and 3771/2737 (dated 1595 A. D.) contain 125 stanzas, while 3772/2019 (dated 1624 A. D.) contains 121 stanzas. The Bengali MS is no 3773/1491d (modern writing).

Thus, in the case of the Megha-dūta, a critical study of the available material would make it evident that the commentaries had already so fixed the different text-traditions that they found themselves reflected in the manuscripts of different groups or regions, and that nothing substantial would be gained by further attempts at fresh collation, especially when so much collation has already been done by different editors from manuscripts of the same type

We know that in the case of the epic text of the Mahābhārata, the manuscripts constitute the primary evidence, while the commentaries, translations, or adaptations are only secondary testimonia. But in the case of a small classical poem of wide popular appeal like the Megha-dūta, which has been so much studied and commented upon, the peculiar circumstances of text-transmission make it clear that not the existing manuscripts (which are mostly later in date) but the commentaries are to be taken as our chief guide for textual study. Only if some old manuscript, anterior in date to the commentaries, could be found, it might furnish textual evidence

61 Macdonell notes only four readings from it, namely (i) 62cd, as in our text, excepting sva-jala-prṣatuh, (ii) 58d pratidīpam as in our text, (iii) 80a jānīvāh as in our text, and (iv) 98ab avusman (as in our text) and brūyāt — Information about South Indian manuscripts is rather meagre, but most of them appear to include Mallinātha's commentary. The Tanjore Sarasvatī Mahal Library manuscripts of the text only, no 3861 and no 3871 (P. P. S. Shastri, Catalogue, vii, pp 2871f), contain respectively 121 (67 + 54) and 122 stanzas, which correspond to Mallinātha's number, while the Madras Government Oriental Library manuscript of the text only, no 11869 (S. Kuppuswami, Catalogue, xv, p 7947), contains 118 stanzas — From Stein's Jammu Catalogue, the character of Kashmirian manuscripts listed therein is not clear, nor is any manuscript available from Kashmir unaffected by their influence.⁶²

All this, however, does not mean that we should neglect the manuscripts. As a matter of fact, interesting readings, not found in the commentaries, are occasionally noted by us in general terms as given by "Some MSS". But we felt that to note all their deviations elaborately would not only overload the critical apparatus but also become unnecessarily confusing.

The Problem of Reconstitution

It is now necessary to consider the different text-traditions, as indicated above, for the purpose of critically reconstituting the text. It is scarcely necessary to say that a text-critic seeks, not a priori the best, but a posteriori the most authentic, readings, and for this purpose a careful evaluation and sifting of the available material become important as furnishing the necessary evidence.

Pathak, as well as Nandargikar, considers the testimony of Jināsena's adaptation to be of a higher authority, presumably because it gives us our oldest available text. Its date is much earlier than that of the existing adaptations, translations, commentaries and manuscripts, and it undoubtedly furnishes the oldest available testimony to which greater authenticity should be attached as such. At first sight, this view would appear very plausible. But from the general trend of Indian text-tradition, it should be recognized that the mere fact that a manuscript, commentary, or adaptation is the oldest does not necessarily imply that it embodies the best text-tradition. On the contrary, it is often found that a comparatively late source of this kind preserves the text in a more authentic form. No absolute criterion, therefore, can be laid down, and each testimony is to be judged on the value of the text-tradition that it represents. In the present case, as Hultzsch has already stated, Jināsena is certainly anterior in time to Vallabhadeva, but he follows a conflated version of the text, and "has incorporated in his poem nine of the spurious verses" of the Megha-dūta, five of which are stamped as interpolations, even by so late a writer as Mallinātha. These verses are also excluded more or less by the Bengal commentators and entirely by Sthiradeva and some commentators from South India. The value of Jināsena's version, as indeed of all versions of the text, should thus depend not merely upon its antiquity but upon the value of the text-tradition which it is found, on examination, to represent. We have here, no doubt, a form of the text which is far older than that obtained from our existing sources, but it establishes nothing beyond the fact that it is evidence only for the text as it existed in that particular local form in the second half of the eighth century and as it was known to Jināsena.⁶³ There is nothing to show that Jināsena was a text-critic; he was not concerned with finding out the most authentic form of the text, but probably he took it as he found it current in the Karnatic area. It is perhaps for this reason that the text is not critically sifted by him. Like our other adaptations, commentaries, or manuscripts, Jināsena's text is thus only one of our evidences, but its testimony, however old, does not of itself prove anything regarding the original text of the Megha-dūta.

62 This conclusion is to a certain extent confirmed by our textual study of the Amaru-sataka, which is now completed and awaits publication. The three recensions of the text of Amaru follow generally the texts presented respectively by the commentators Arjunavarman (West Indian), Vemabhūpāla (South Indian) and Ravicandra or Rudramadeva (East Indian). This conclusion, however, should not apply to all classical poems but only to those which, like the Megha-dūta and the Amaru-sataka, have regional commentaries more or less fixing the different text-traditions — V. G. Paranjpe in his ed. of Sthiradeva's commentary (p. xxx) generally agrees with this view with regard to the textual critique of the Megha-dūta.

Similar remarks apply, more or less, to the testimony of the oldest known commentary of Vallabhadeva. One may accept Hultzsch's assertion that the secluded position of "that home of Sarasvatī, the Kashmir Valley," preserved and handed down the text of Kālidāsa in a much less modified form,

63. Namely *3—'10, *14

64. We can here cite the analogy of the Javanese version of the Mahābhārata, which plays a similar role in the textual criticism of the epic.

especially in manuscripts written in Śāradā-Kāśmīrī script⁶⁵, but from this fact it is not necessary to exaggerate the textual value of this commentary. The text of Vallabhadeva, like that of Jināsena, only presents it as it was current in Kashmir and known to the commentator in the tenth or the eleventh century, and is not absolute evidence for the original text of the Megha-dūta, which is to be determined by a comparative study and evaluation of its existing variety of forms. Nevertheless, both Jināsena and Vallabhadeva must be given their due (and not exaggerated) importance from the point of view of textual criticism. Apart from the question of interpolated stanzas, where there is an independent agreement of readings between Jināsena and Vallabhadeva, we have generally accepted it, but where there is difference, we have taken into account other available evidence for a reasonable solution.

It should be noted in this connection that while Jināsena admits into his text nine doubtful verses (*3-*10, *14) and omits ten (*1, *2, *11, *13, *15-*19), the Kashmirian Vallabhadeva excludes all the nineteen doubtful verses (*1-*19). He is supported in this respect by the South Indian Dakṣiṇāvarta-nātha, Pūrṇa-sarasvatī and Parameśvara, as well as by Sthiradeva. This independent agreement, supported by intrinsic probability, affords a sound basis for regarding all these verses (*1-*19) as interpolated, especially as most of them are also omitted by the Bengal commentators Sanātana Gosvāmin and Bharata-mallikā⁶⁶. When we come to the question of 65 An interesting illustration of the process of conflation in Devanāgarī (as distinguished from Śāradā-Kāśmīrī) manuscript is afforded by Hultzsch's Devanāgarī D, which was relied upon by Pathak and Nandargkar, but which obviously embodies a faulty text-tradition. But the fact that a MS is written in Śāradā characters need not of itself prove its superiority. Of Hultzsch's three Śāradā manuscripts one (marked B) appears to be late, and "shares many corruptions with D".—The Devanāgarī MS (no 226/Or 3352 of Vallabha's commentary in the British Museum contains 113 stanzas, slightly in excess of 111 given in Hultzsch's edition. Vallabha's text really gives (in Hultzsch) 112 stanzas, but one (*1) he himself believes to be imitative and spurious, hence 111 stanzas are given as genuine, by Vallabha.

readings,⁶⁷ however, we find that the case is different. Macdonell is right when he states⁶⁸ that "it is pretty clear that Vallabhadeva's readings are often not the original ones", and this may be said of most of our other sources, including the text of Jinasena. Here we have no similar criterion for determining the question of authenticity.

With regard to the other adaptations and translations, a few words are necessary to indicate their general character and evidentiary value. The Tibetan translation, made in the thirteenth century, like the Sinhalese paraphrase of unknown date, is a good external aid, but the Tibetan translation appears to follow, generally in its readings, the Eastern (Bengal) textual tradition.⁶⁹ Its text, however, is not free from conflation. No doubt, it omits as many as thirteen doubtful verses (*3-10, *15-19), but it is characterized by the inclusion of six (*1, *2, *11-14), and is singular⁷⁰ in inserting *11, *12. With regard to the Sinhalese paraphrase, it is curious that it follows 67 It is possible to believe that Jinasena, taking his text as he found it, did not himself make any emendation, even if it was an inferior text, but Vallabhadeva appears to have introduced or suggested emendations of his own. One such would be prāsama-divase in 2c, another expressly suggested is pratana tanunā in 99a, which reading some commentators, including Mallinātha, appear to have accepted. We have given below some instances where later commentators have indulged in emendations quite freely, and most of the Pāthāntaras arise in this way.

69 The Tibetan translation is fairly literal, but it sometimes uses synonyms or equivalents for the actual words: e.g. gandha-vaha for vāta or pavana in 9a, 14a, 31d, Satakratu for Ākhandala in 15b and Maghavan in 6b, Āṅganapūrvaka for āṅgya in 12a, Gurū or Pūrvati for Bhavānī in 41a, Śrīkanṭha for Caṇḍeśvara in 33b, Kāmadhenu for Surabhi in 45c, bālātapa for pratyūsa in 31b, Mādhava for Śārṅga in 46a, rājakula for ksatra in 48b, Arjuna for Gāṇḍīva-dhanvan in 48c, rasavat for abhimata-rasa in 49a, bhuja for skandha in 53a, keśa-samūha for bāla-bhāra in 53b, Daśakanṭha for Daśamukha in 58a, Balabhadra for Halabhi in 59d, svabhāva for the suffix maya in 66a, bhāsvat for savitr in 70d, etc.

70 These two verses (*11, *12) are found in the Tibetan translation, as well as in a few inferior manuscripts, but they are omitted by most known commentaries.

the North Indian rather than the South Indian text-tradition of Mallinātha, and often agrees in its readings with the Tibetan⁷¹ and Bengal versions. It includes however, seven doubtful verses (*2, *5, *6-*8, *10, *14)⁷² and appears to follow a presumably late version of the text. As the Nemi-dūta, like the Sīla-dūta, gives us only the last line of each stanza of the original, and as it makes use of a much interpolated version, this Jaina source is not of much value for our purpose. With the text in Sīla-dūta, it agrees in admitting most of the doubtful verses (fourteen in number), even including *15 and *16 (but omitting *11-*12, *17-*19), and this is in general conformity with the later conflated Jaina tradition of the text.

This Jaina tradition is represented by a large number of Devanāgarī manuscripts and commentaries, especially by the commentaries of Cāritravardhana, Sumativijaya and Mahīmasīmha, as well as by the anonymous Sāroddhārṇī. These commentaries embody a tradition which goes even further than that of Jinasena who, as we have already noted, includes nine doubtful verses (*3-*10, *14) but excludes ten (*1, *2, *11-*13, *15-*19). Cāritravardhana admits as many as eleven doubtful verses (*1-*4, *6, *7, *9, *14-*16, and even *19)⁷³ and omits only eight (*5, *8, *10-*13, *17, *18). Both Sumativijaya and Mahīmasīmha incorporate so many spurious verses⁷⁴ that the total number of stanzas in their texts comes up to 126, while the Sāroddhārṇī agrees with them with the exception that it omits *18. Thus, the total number of stanzas in the text of these commentators, as well as in that of West Indian Devanāgarī manuscripts influenced by them, lies generally between 122 and 126 or even 127. In this respect Sthiradeva, if

71 Beckh (Beitrag zur Text-kritik, pp 10, 11, 15) gives some instances of striking agreements between the Tibetan translation and the Sinhalese paraphrase

72 It omits twelve such verses, namely, *1 *3, *4, *9, *11-13, *15-*19. The total number of stanzas in it is 118, as against 117 of the Tibetan translation. A concordance of verses will be found in Hultzsch's edition.

73 Thus, the total number of stanzas in the printed text is 122, but the BORI MS (no 345 of 1895-98) gives 118.

74 A concordance of verses will be found in Pathak's edition. Mahima includes *19 (unnumbered) at the end (BORI MS 389 of 1884-87).

he was Jaina, stands apart, his text admitting only 111 stanzas as genuine

Coming to the remaining commentaries, we have already spoken of the greater reliability of those of Bengal⁷⁵ In South India, the pre-Mallinātha commentary of the Āndhra scholiast, Sarasvatītirtha, may be remarkable for its acuteness of exposition, which drew the encomium of Pathak, but since it admits a large number of spurious verses (excepting *1, *11-13, *17-19) and includes even *15 and *16, its text-tradition cannot in this respect be very reliable, nor do its readings always appear authentic Whatever may be the intrinsic merit of his commentary and his occasional strange readings⁷⁶ which Mallinātha pointedly disputes, Dakṣiṇāvartanātha however, appears to be more discriminating in excluding, like Vallabhadeva, all the doubtful verses *1-19 (and even 70 in addition¹) and therefore gives us, from this point of view, a more reliable text In this respect Pūrṇa-sarasvatī and Parmeśvara⁷⁷ agree with him as against Sarasvatītirtha and Mallinātha It seems, therefore, that the South Indian text-tradition was not uniform, the commentators of Malabar, like that of Kashmir, preserving as they did, a text free from conflation Mallinātha's Samjīvanī, however, is deservedly popular⁷⁸ for its learned yet lucid exposition and has been often considered authoritative, but it cannot be said that it represents the best text-tradition of the Megha-dūta It is true that it omits nine doubtful verses (*1, *11-13, *15-19) and expressly declares

75 See above pp viii-ix The total number of stanzas given by the Eastern commentaries, as well as by Bengali MSS in general, is between 118 and 114 Even such late Bengal commentators as Rāmanātha Tarkālamkāra and Haragovinda Vācaspati give respectively totals of 116 and 115 stanzas, Kṛṣṇadāsa Vidyāvāgīśa has 115, Bhagūatha Miśra 114

76 On some curious interpretations and capricious readings of Dakṣiṇāvartanātha see Kshetresh Chandra Chattopadhyay in Kuppuswami Sastrī Commemoration Volume, pp 17-23.

77 The text of Parmeśvara, like that of Pūrṇa-sarasvatī, contains 110 stanzas only (so does that of Dakṣiṇāvarta)

78 Most South Indian (Grantha and Telugu) MSS either include Mallinātha's commentary or generally follow his text the interpolated character (Prakṣipta) of six more (*2-6, '9); but it admits at the same time four such verses ('7, *8, *10, '14). In the readings of passages also, it cannot be said that Mallinātha always gives us the most authentic forms. And yet, like Nīlakaṇṭha's very late commentary on the Mahābhārata, the Samjīvanī has practically superseded by its reputation and currency most of the earlier commentaries on the text of the Megha-dūta.⁷⁹ The critical insight of Mallinātha, however, as against that of the West-Indian Jaina commentators, is shown by the fact that, leaving aside the verses omitted or considered 'interpolated' by him, the total number of stanzas in his text is not more than 115. In this he agrees more or less with the tradition of the Bengal commentators.

The Question of Recensions

In determining the spuriousness of a particular stanza, we have proceeded on the principle that we should view with suspicion any stanza which is found only in a few of our sources and omitted in most of the others. In other words, the genuineness of a stanza is questionable where there is no clear or unanimous testimony. Judged by this test we find that the verses '1-'19 are evidently spurious, as they are omitted independently by the Kashmirian Vallabhadeva and the Jaina (?) Sthiradeva, on the one hand, and the South Indian Dakṣiṇāvarta, Pūrṇasarasvatī and Parameśvara on the other, even though they are given, more or less, by other groups of commentators. The later Jaina commentators, however, by whom most of the West Indian non-Jaina commentators and manuscripts appear to have been influenced, admit, as we have seen, most of these additional verses and present a much conflated text, which (more than that of any other group) seems to stand apart. The question arises whether we can take this Jaina tradition as representing a different recension of the original text. For deciding the issue, if we turn to a consideration of other textual facts, we find that this is not the case. With regard to varia-

79 This commentary has been printed much earlier and more often than any other, but, as strange discrepancies in readings occur in its different editions, Nandargikar is right in remarking that a critical edition of this commentary is also desirable.

tion of readings, for instance, we find that with the exception of a limited number of passages,⁸⁰ the divergences are such as may be normally expected in manuscripts or commentaries of different groups or regions, and the Jaina tradition as such cannot be distinguished specifically on this ground. There are three instances, again, of important divergence in the transposition of stanzas. The first is concerned with 9-12 where only Jinasena and Vallabhadeva (with Sthiradeva) differ. In the second case, of 86-89, the difference occurs chiefly among Vallabhadeva, Sthiradeva, Sarasvatītiṭha, Cāritravardhana and Mallinātha. The third case is more complicated, in the sequence of 65-72, there is hardly any unanimity among our sources.⁸¹ Here also the Jaina tradition as such does not stand apart, as it does with regard to the inclusion of the spurious verses. But even in the insertion of these verses, the later Jaina commentators and manuscripts are not unanimous with regard to the number inserted, which varies⁸² from 9 to 16. The Jaina tradition, therefore, for some reason or other, seems to have been from the beginning (as Jinasena's text shows) more inclusive than exclusive, and the facts adduced above would go to indicate that there never was such a cleavage of text-tradition as would justify the presumption of two or more recensions of the text.

Interpolated Verses

The most important textual problem of the Megha-dūta, therefore, is not so much the question of text-readings or of

80. Eg 24b, 54ab, 60d, 62cd, 106a

81. See our notes to 64

82. The total number of stanzas, as we have already noted, thus varies between 120 and 127. If Sthiradeva is, as he appears to be, a Jaina author, he is an exception, for his text, as we have already noted, gives only 111 stanzas, and in this respect he agrees with Vallabhadeva. This exception perhaps proves that the Jaina tradition did not originally differ. It is also notable that in the order of stanzas 65-72 Sthiradeva's text agrees with that of Vallabhadeva, as also in the order of 9-12. For all we know, Sthiradeva might have been a Kashmirian like Vallabhadeva, but MSS of his commentary are found to-day in Poona (Mandlik Collection), Baroda (Oriental Institute), Alwar, Mithlā and Tanjore (Sarasvatī Mahal Library), but not so far in Kashmir.

transposition of stanzas as the problem of interpolated verses. One curious fact proved by Jinasena's text is that some of the spurious verses (at least nine) are very old⁸³. But the process of accretion must have continued through centuries thereafter. How the great popularity and currency of the Megha-dūta paid the penalty of interpolation will be clear from the variation of the number of stanzas found today in the different manuscripts of the text and commentaries. We have already noted above the total number of stanzas given by manuscripts of the text only. With regard to the commentaries the lowest number of total stanzas is 110 given by Dakṣiṇāvarta, Pūrṇa-sarasvatī and Parameśvara (all of whom omit st 70) and 111 found in Vallabhadeva and Sthiradeva (both of whom include st 70). The highest number is furnished mostly by Jaina authors and commentators, thus Vijaya-sūri and Megharāja, each 127, Janārdana, Lakṣmī-nivāsa, Sumativijaya, Mahīmasīmha-gaṇi and the Megha-latā, each 126, the Nemi-dūta, the Śila-dūta, the Sāroddhārinī, Divākara Upādhyāya and Kanakakīrti-gaṇi (Leipzig MS no 416), each 125, Sarasvatī-tīrtha and Kṣemahamsa-gaṇi, each 123, Cāntravardhana 122 and Jinasena 120. Next come the Sinhalese paraphrase which contains 118, and the Tibetan translation 117. Mallinātha has 121, but omitting the 'praksipta' verses, 115. Among Eastern (including Bengal) commentators, Makaranda Miśra gives 118, Rāmanātha Tarkā-lamkāra 116, Śāśvata, Saṁātana Gosvāmin, Kalyāṇamalla, Kaviratna Cakravartin and Haragovinda Vācaspati, each 115, Bhagīratha Miśra and Bharata-mallika 114 each. When we come to the early editions of the text,⁸⁴ we have Wilson 116, Gildemeister 113 and Stenzler 112.

From these facts it is clear that in spite of diversity there is a general agreement in the matter of extent between the text of the Malabar commentators on the one hand, and that of Kashmirian Vallabhadeva as well as Sthiradeva on the other. As there is no prima facie possibility of mutual contamination, 83 The additional stanzas *15, *16 and *19 are shown by P. K. Gode to have been known before 1385 A.D. (ABORI, xv, pp 111-14).

84 These editions omit the spurious verses, except as follows. Wilson includes *1, *2, *13, *14, *16, Gildemeister *2, *13, Stenzler *14.

we have taken this agreement as original, and not secondary, and it is highly probable that Kālidāsa's text originally contained not more than 110 or 111 stanzas. In our edition therefore, the total number of stanzas is 111, which agrees with that of Vallabhadeva and Sthiradeva. So far as our evidence goes, it appears that no stanza that does not appear in Vallabhadeva's text is genuine. We believe also that the authenticity of any of the stanzas included in Vallabhadeva's text cannot be easily disproved. One or two may be ultimately rejected if better evidence turns up. Doubt has already been cast by Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar on 62 and 70, and on the latter also by Dakṣiṇāvarta, Pūrṇa-sarasvatī and Parameśvara, but our evidence does not, at the present stage, justify their exclusion. In this connexion J Hertel⁸⁵ suggested with confidence that Kālidāsa's poem originally contained 108 stanzas. He would consider 70 as interpolated, and doubt the authenticity of 7 and 8, the text and commentary of which were omitted by Hultzsch's manuscript C. But the evidence is hardly conclusive.

Some of these additional stanzas are indeed so finely fashioned and cleverly dovetailed that one would be reluctant to omit them; but apart from personal preference, they consist mostly of fanciful addition of details, the removal of which would hardly damage the original text. A reference to our critical notes in each case would show that they are inserted by a few only of our sources and are evidently spurious imitations. So far as we can judge from our available material, we feel amply justified in excluding them from our constituted text, and in this way we come nearer to certainty regarding the original compass of the poem.

Authenticity of Readings

With regard to readings of particular passages, words, or phrases, no manuscript or commentary, however, is sacrosanct. We have, therefore, carefully considered them, not on the ground of subjective preference, nor again merely from the standpoint of taste and style, which are at best unsafe guides,

85 Gottingische gelehrte Anzeigen, 1912, p. 408

but on the actual evidence furnished by the text-tradition and supported by intrinsic probability. No doubt, scribal errors have been responsible for some peculiar readings⁸⁶, but in some cases genuine variants arise from the misplaced ingenuity of the commentators themselves. In this connexion the impression of Nandargikar, who collated a fairly large number of commentaries, is worth quoting. He states very wisely but rather strongly (p. 26) "A careful examination of the several commentaries has convinced me that a few only of the various readings have probably arisen from the ignorance of the scribes, but they are mostly due to the unscrupulousness and the ignorance of the expositors and their desire to make the poet conform to their own ideas of what is good or bad, correct or incorrect, wise or unwise, decent or indecent, regardless of the historical worth of the poet's words or his expressions."

A few illustrations on this point will not be out of place. The commentators appear worried over the reading śiṅṇad-valaya-subhagam in 76c. Several commentators, including Mallinātha but excluding Vallabhadeva (and Jināsena's text), modify it into śiṅṇā-valaya-, simply because the verbal root śiṅṇ is not used in Parasmaipada, while the grammatical conscience of those who accept the reading (e.g. Vallabhadeva and Bharata-mallika) attempts to justify the irregularity by some far-fetched grammatical subterfuge, simply on the presumption that Kālidāsa's original must be flawless from the point of view of Pāṇini's grammar.⁸⁷ Another similar instance would be āśvasantyah in 8b, for which some commentators would read āśvasatyah. One commentator pointedly remarks on the difficulty of the Samāsa in svādhikāra-pramattah in 1a; hence obviously the variant svādhikārāt pramattah is meant as a solution. Conformity to grammar leads to the modification of grhāt to grhān in 72a, but since the word grha generally in classical usage is neuter, grammar is not respected thereby.¹ The crop of variants for the reading alakam bāla-kundānu-

86. E.g., sampratyagrah for sa pratyagrah in 4c, a-mantrānām for ā-mandrānām in 34d.

87. That it is not so will be clear by a reference to Tarapada Chowdhury's Linguistic Aberrations in Kālidāsa's Writings (Patna 1951).

viddham in 65a is apparently meant to rectify the rhetorical fault of Prakramabhanga, although uniformity of diction is hardly found in the next line. There is a great deal of ingenious explanation of the phrase *śikhara-daśanā*⁸⁸ or śikhari-daśanā (and even *a-śikhara-daśanā*¹) in 79a, possibly because its exact meaning became obscure, and the reading remained uncertain. Another instance of unnecessary exercise of scholastic ingenuity will be found in the various readings suggested for rasike in 82d. In 67c the expression *cotitāh*⁸⁹ is apparently a lectio difficilior, for which easier variants are inevitable. So also syūtā in 73b and prārthanā-vartmanah in 111a. With reference to a particular reading in 70c one commentator asserts it is the mukhya pāṭha while other readings are merely pāṭhāntaras, but it is not clear how he arrives at this dogmatic conclusion. In the frankly erotic stanza 69 the reading vāsah kāmāt is demurely substituted by *ksaumam rāgāt*¹. The reading pulnajaḥṇām in 41d (for vivṛta-jaghaṇām) is perhaps an attempt not only to cover up the bluntness of the expression vivṛta but also to make it fall in line with salila-vasanam and rodho-nutambam, but the modification overlooks the fact that the entire Pāda is an instance of Kālidāsa's oft-employed poetic figure Arthāntara-nyāsa, in which a general proposition is adduced to support a particular case.

It will be seen that most of these readings are concerned with niceties or decencies of language and diction and are often too clever or too fastidious to be convincing. In most cases it is not difficult to see how the variations arose. There are many lines, however, or even stanzas, in which there is hardly any variant or only variants of a trifling character. It would seem, therefore, that leaving aside deliberate scholastic interference or scribal vagary, the text of Kālidāsa's Megha-dūta (apart from the interpolated verses) was, happily, handed down fairly uniformly. The number of stanzas which show little or no important variation in readings is about 25 ; while the variation in some others is so slight that it concerns not the whole stanzas but only particular words and phrases in a Pāda or two. Not many go much beyond this ; in only a few stanzas (32, 54, 60, 62, 70) do the discrepancies extend to the equivalent of between one line (i.e. Pāda) and one line and a half. One cannot be dogmatic with regard to the authenticity of a good number of the readings, nor positively certain. Variations there must be in a classical text so widely read and commented upon, and possibly we are still a considerable way from Kālidāsa's exact expression in some cases, but the variations so far found are not greatly important, and do not, on the whole, seem to affect very much the poet's own text in its pristine form.

88 The Tibetan translation renders śikhara by 'bkra-baḥi-pha-lam' which is translated by Beckh as 'bunte diamanten'.

89 The root cut, recognised in the Dhātu-pāṭha, appears to have been less familiar than the root cyut.

Theme, Source and Characteristics

The theme of the Megha-dūta is too simple and too well known to be related in detail. It describes the severance of an imaginary Yakṣa from his beloved and his passionate longings in loneliness. As his master Kubera, the lord of Alakā, has punished him, for neglect of duty, with the curse of one year's exile, the Yakṣa comes to stay in the groves on the slopes of the Rāmāgiri hill, presumably in Central India. Emaciated and sorrowful, he sees at the approach of the rainy season a cloud clinging to the hill. The sight fills him with intense yearning, and impels him to request the cloud to convey a message of love and consolation to his sorrowing beloved in the remote Himālaya. He describes with much power and beauty the hills and rivers, cities and shrines which the cloud, in company with swans and cranes, should traverse en route to the Lake Mānasa and Mount Kailāsa, where the divine city of Alakā is situated. Ascending the plateau called Māla, the cloud should on its way rest on the peak of Mount Āmrakūta after quenching with showers its forest fires. A swift journey will bring it to the river Narmadā, parted into streamlets at the rugged foot of the Vindhya mountain, and to the Daśārṇa country and its capital city Vidiśā standing on the Vetravatī. After crossing the rivers Sindhu and Nirvindhya which pine for its showers, the cloud will reach the country of Avanti, where the old villagers are still conversant with the romantic story of Udayana Although a little out of the way, its capital city Ujjayinī and the shine of Mahākālā must not be missed After a little lingering over the stream Gambhīrā, the cloud should pass on to the Devagiri hill, where there is a temple of Kārttikeya Crossing the river Carmanvatī, famed in mythology, and the region of Daśapura, it will reach the country of Brahmāvarta and Kuruksetra, the scene of Arjuna's heroic deeds, and drink deep from the river Sarasvatī, for whose pure water Balarāma at one time discarded his favourite wine Then the cloud should proceed to where the Ganges descends from the Himālaya near Kanakhala, and pass through the opening in the Krauñcha mountain, made by Paraśurāma, by which the swans go to the Mānasa Lake Reaching Mount Kailāsa the cloud will perceive the city of Alakā resting on its lap The city is then described with its delights and splendours, and the home of the Yaksa with its beautiful surroundings The charms of his wife are then depicted in glowing colours Blighted by separation, pale and emaciated, she now seeks many a device to while away her lonely days and sleepless watches of night If perchance she is in slumber, the cloud should wait and let its lightning play gently like the radiance of fireflies, and it should muffle its thunder so that her pleasant dreams be not disturbed Gently awakened by a cool breeze, she would rest her eyes on the window where the cloud sits, and listen to it, as Sītā listened to Hanūmat, delivering a message of tender love from her husband and an assurance of ultimate reunion ⁹⁰

The idea of sending a message may have been suggested by the embassy of Hanūmat in the Rāmāyana ⁹¹ or of the Swan in the story of Nala in the Mahābhārata The first conjecture gains plausibility from the fact that an allusion is made in 97 to Sītā anxiously listening to the message of Hanūmat, while it is possible to hold that the longing of Rāma for Sītā might have suggested that of the banished Yaksa for his wife⁹². A distant parallel is also found in the Kāmaṇīlāpa Jātaka (no 297), where a crow is sent as a messenger by a man in danger to his wife. But whatever may have been the source of Kālidāsa's inspiration, there can be no doubt that the treatment is his own. The selection of a friendly cloud as the bearer of the Yaksa's message from Rāmagiri to Alakā is undoubtedly a strange device ; it is criticized by the old rhetorician Bhāmaha as defective and by some modern scholars as unreal. Perhaps anticipating some such views, the poet himself offers the almost demented condition of the sorrowful Yaksa as an apology. But even if it is a highly poetical, it is not an unnatural personification, when one bears in mind the noble mass of Indian monsoon clouds, which seems almost instinct with life as it travels from the Southern tropical sky to the snows of the Himālaya.

⁹⁰ Some scholars have concerned themselves with the identification of the Yaksa's Āsrama and the route prescribed for the cloud, but the question is one of historical or geographical rather than literary interest, and has only an indirect bearing on the appreciation of the poem itself The predominantly imaginary character of the poem should not also be forgotten

But the unreality of the poem does not end here. It has been urged that the temporary character of a very brief separation and the absolute certainty of reunion make the display of grief unmanly and its pathos unreal. Perhaps the sense of irrevocable loss would have made the motif more effective, the trivial setting gives an appearance of sentimentality to the real sentiment of the poem. The device of a curse, again, in bringing about the separation — a motif which is repeated in another form in the Abhijñāna-śakuntala — is also criticized, for the breach here is caused by an external agency, and not by psychological complications, to which we are more inclined in modern times. But this criticism loses sight of the predominantly sentimental character of Sanskrit poetry and judges a device by a standard to which it does not profess to conform.

It is indeed not necessary to exaggerate the artistic insufficiency of the device, for even if the setting is unreal, the sense of sorrow in the poem itself is straight and vivid. If we set aside the imaginary setting, we find that the picture of the parted and pining lovers, somewhat heightened though it may be, is yet true and passionate enough to make the pathos real in its appeal. No doubt, the picture is invested with a highly imaginary atmosphere, it presents a dreamland of fancy, its characters are semi-divine beings, and its imagery is accordingly adapted; but all this does not negate its very human and genuine expression of the erotic sentiment. Its vividness of touch has led people even to imagine that it gives a poetic form to the author's own personal experience, but of this one can never be sure. The poem has often been loosely called an elegy or a lyric, but neither in metre nor in matter does it approximate to the Greek elegy, still less to the modern lyric in the strict sense. There is little of subjectivity in its finished artistic execution, and the lyric or elegiac mood does not predominate, but the unmistakable warmth of its expression of rich and earnest emotion redeems the banality of the theme and makes the poem almost lyrical in effect. The wonderful spell of language and the stately-moving music of the Mandākrāntā metre very well suit its picturesque and melancholy recollection of tender love. We can characterise the Megha-dūta as a highly poetical expression of the mood of reminiscent love in the presence of suffering. This theme reappears in Kālidāsa's other poems in varied situation — in Rāma's recollective tenderness in describing to Sītā the scenes of their past joys and sorrows over which they pass in their aerial journey from Lankā, and more intensely in the two lamentations of Aja and Ratī.

It should be noted that the ardent feeling in this poem is not isolated but is blended picturesquely with a great deal of descriptive matter, which stands in the way of regarding the composition as a pure lyric. The description, however, is not a bare recital; for nature here is viewed through the eyes of a passionate lover. The intensity of his feeling is set in the midst of the Indian rainy season than which, as Rabindranath rightly remarks, nothing is more appropriate for an atmosphere of loneliness and longing, it is also placed in the midst of splendid natural scenery which enhances its poignant appeal. We find, therefore, that in the earlier part of the poem the description of external nature is heightened throughout by an

But this verse is omitted by Cv. st d p b Param., Eg, and its authenticity is doubtful. Of Eastern Commentators it is included by Sanātana Gosvāmin and Kalyāṇamalla but omitted by Makaranda Miśra and Bharata-mallika. The reasons urged for its exclusion are. (1) since the object of the Yakṣa, as mentioned at the outset, is to send a message for 'sustaining the life of his beloved', the exhortation to bring back a message to sustain his own life is an out-of-place and clumsy effort, and (2) the stanza itself is made up of reminiscences from 10, 52, 91, 109 [variants: a), J, Cs. g, Ew आश्वास्यैना J-विरहे शोकदृष्ट्या, Kalyāṇamalla and Ew-विरहादुग्रशोकां; Foulkes-विरहेणोग्रशोका T, Ew सखी मे; Cs सखी तां, some Mss. सखीं स्वां.—b) J तस्माद्वे-

GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES

GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES ON THE PLACES MENTIONED IN THE MEGHA-DŪTA

(Given in the order of the Stanzas)

KAMAGIRI The exact location of this hill is uncertain. Both Vallabhadeva and Mallinātha say that it is Citra-kūta. Wilson identified it with Ramtek, the hill of Rāma', which is still a place of pilgrimage, situated about 2½ miles to the north of Nagpur, and this conjecture is supported, according to V. V. Mirashi, by an inscription of Pravarasena II. Some would identify it with Ramgarh hill in the Madhya Pradesh, situated near Āmra-kūta, which is the source of the river Narmadā. Or, is the place as imaginary as the poet's mythical Alakā?

MĀLA Perhaps Mallinātha is right in believing that Māla does not refer to any particular place, but it simply means an elevated table-land, implied by the word ānuhya. Similarly Vallabhadeva would interpret it as an alluvial plateau. But some commentators understand by Māla mūlākhyo deśah or māla-yogūn mālava itī prasiddho deśah while others explain it vaguely as ketiā-samūha, vara-bhūmī, grāmāntarāṭlavī, and so forth. Wilson thinks that a particular district is meant, and identifies it with a place called Malda in the vicinity of Raipur, the chief town of northern Chattisgad.

ĀMIRA-KŪTA The hill is identified by Wilson with Amarakantak. But Paranjpe demurs to this with the following remarks: "Amarakantak is 200 miles to the east of the straight line joining Ramtek and Bhilsa (Vidiśā), and the description drutatara-gatis tatparam varīma tīnah revān drakṣyasi will be impossible in its case as it is the source of the Narmadā. Amarakantak, further, is in the Maikala mountain, and therefore vindhya-pāde viśīrṇām will be inapplicable to the river nearby, the Vindhya range being far away to the west. It must be some hill to the north of the Mahadev hills and south of Sohagpur."

RIVĀ This river is identified with the Narmadā, issuing from the Vindhya rocks.

DAŚĀRNA Eastern Malwa, including the kingdom of Bhopal, was probably the Western Daśarna, the capital of which was Vidiśā (Bhilsa). Eastern Daśarna formed a part of Chattisgad district. There is also a river with a similar name (Daśan) flowing through it, and falling into the Betwa.

VIDIŚĀ and VETRAVATĪ This is modern Bhilsa, situated on the river Betwa. The river rises on the northern side of the Vindhya range, traverses the province of Malwa, and falls into the Yamunā near Kalpee towards the north east corner of Allahabad.

NICAIJI Some hill near Bhilsa, but not necessarily a hill of small elevation as the name implies. Some would take it as the low range of Bhojapura hills lying to the south of Bhilsa.

VANA-NADI, NAVA-NADI and NAGA-NADI Probably the small river which is reached after crossing the Betwa and which is now called Pārvaṭī (a near enough equivalent of Naga-nadi).

UJJAYINI and SIPRĀ Modern Ujjain situated on the Sīprā. It was the capital of the country (janapada) called AVANTI, which would correspond to ancient Malwa. It is also called VISĀLĀ. The temple of Śiva, called MAHĀKĀLA, stands in the city.

SINDHU Identified with Kālī or Kālā Sindh which flows into the Chambal. Some commentators, including Mallinātha, take Sindhu to mean not a particular river, but river in general, and refer to the Nirvindhya. See our critical notes on this point.

NIRVINDHYĀ It may be a small tributary of the Chambal between the rivers Betwa and the Kālī Sindh, probably the river called Neway (or according to others the river called Patwan), which flows into the Kālī Sindh. It is mentioned by Jināsena in his Ādipurāṇa.

SIPRĀ See above under Ujjayinī.

GANDHAVATI Probably a tributary of the Sīprā, on which the temple of Mahākāla stands.

GAMBIHĪRĀ A small river in Malwa, which Paranjpe considers to be a tributary of Sīprā, flowing into it south of Mehādput. Also mentioned by Jināsena.

DEVA-GIRI Situated obviously between Ujjayinī and Daśa-pura (Mandasor). Pathak believes it to be the same as "a place called in the map Devagara situated south of the Chambal in the centre of Malwa". There is a Devgarh situated 60 miles south-west of Jhansi, which is the site of a temple of Skanda, but Paranjpe thinks that this cannot be our Devagiri and that the place requires fresh identification.

CARMANVATI Referred to as the Kīrti of Rantideva. It is the modern Chambal river.

DAŚA-PURA It is probably the modern Dasor (Mandasor) in Malwa on the left bank of the Śivadā. Some would identify it with Rantipore or Ratnampore lying a little to the north of the river Chambal.

BRAHMĀVARTĀ It is the region lying between the rivers Sarasvatī and Drsadvatī, according to Manu II, 17. Probably includes Sonapat, Amun, Karnal and Panipat.

KURUKṢETRA Contiguous to Brahmāvartā, a little to the south-east of Thanesar. Still a place of pilgrimage, especially at the time of eclipse.

SARASVATĪ One of the sacred rivers of India which flows a little to the north-west of Kurukṣetra, and runs into the desert of Marwar where it is lost in the sands.

ERRATA

In spite of all care in proof-reading, it is to be regretted that some misprints still linger, especially in the footnotes and indices. Most of these are due to the breaking down of repha, anusvāra and visarga, or of the vowel-signs for i, e and o. As these can be easily made out, they are not listed here, but there are a few serious misprints in the text, which are listed below and which the reader may kindly note.

- Stanza 20, line 2 Read जम्बू.
32, line 3. Read हर्म्येष्वस्याः
72, line 4 Read स्तबक
96, line 4 Read वेणिमोक्षो

KANAKHALA It is now the village of the same name near Hardwar on the west bank of the Ganges. According to Mallinātha it refers to the hill through the gorge of which the Ganges descends, but there is no such hill at this place.

CARNA-NYASA A sacred spot in the Himalayas so called from its having a foot-print of Śiva. Wilson identifies it with Har ka pari (the steps of Śiva) near Hardwar.

KRAUNCA-RANDHRA Famed in the Purāṇas as the gap made in the Krauñca mountain by Paraśurāma, it is said to be used by flamingoes as a passage to the Mānasa lake. The geographical location is not known.

KAILĀSA and MĀNASA The Kailāsa mountain (altitude 22,028 ft) is said to be the mythical abode of Śiva and Pārvatī. It is situated due north from the centre of the Mānasa lake (altitude 14,900 ft, area 133 sq miles). Kailāsa is 16 miles from the north edge and 32 miles from the south edge of the lake.

ALAKA The mythical abode of Kubera and the Yaksas, supposed to be situated on the slopes of Mount Kailāsa.
